Time was when the half-sneering, half-bantering "allee samee Melican man" would have been the instinctive comment upon China's adoption of any of the ways and laws of the western world. Now that country becomes a republic and opens the first session of a representative congress in a fashion that commands the most serious respect of the world. . . . The simple circumstance that these hundreds of representative Chinese ware devoid of queues and flowered silk jackets, but were shorn and garbed like Americans or Englishmen, was profoundly significant of the passing away of the old order and of the entry of this strange nation of three hundred millions into the practical world-life of the twentieth century.

Would Do What He Could.

The legislature of a western state contains this year several women members. At a recent banquet they were invited to speak, but all with one accord began to make excuses, and one of the men was asked to represent them. He accepted, saying that he was willing to do so, so far as in him lay, but that his case was similar to that of a naughty little girl who was told that if she didn't behave she would be shut up in the chicken coop.

"You can shut me up in the chicken coop if you want to," replied she, "but I ain't going to lay any eggs."—Judge.

SPECIAL NOTICE

To My Friends and Patrons and The Public at Large.

I have perfected a system for repairing Buggies and Vehicles of all kinds whereby the work is better than ever, wearing longer, holding the luster just twice as long as the usual way of repairing. Another great advantage whereby it is far ahead of the old way is that I use no water on any part of the body or gear uutil the job is in the last coat of rubbing varnish, and by that time I have all parts of the body well protected, where in doing work the old way we rub with a rubbing stone out of water, called Filler, thereby letting the water get between the pannel of the body and the sill, loosening the plugs, rusting the screws and causing plugs to come out. That is why your pannels break in corners and come loose—water gets in and destroys the glue, letting the water stand there by rotting the wood.

Recollect I have been in the Carriage Business for 35 years, and have made it a life study. I have been working on my Dry System for the last four years and now have it perfected. While there is more work attached to my system and material is more in cost, my price for a Buggy still remains the same—$12.00 for a first-class job of painting and guaranteed to be such. If you want something cheaper in painting I will do it for you but at you risk.

Kelly Rubber Tires.

I have just bought a full supply of the Kelly Springfield Rubber Tires and am prepared to supply your wants at a moment's notice. I have 3,000 pounds now ready to put on while you wait for them at prices to suit everybody that wants a high-grade tire for just the same money they pay other people for a cheap grade. Of course you know I am prepared to do anything for you in the carriage maker's line. Come and see me and get prices and I'll assure you you will go home convinced you have been treated alright.

N. B.—I guarantee the Kelly Tire to be first quality—not second or third grade, and wear twice as long as anyother make of tire.

Yours Respectfully,
H. G. COLLINS, Erlanger, Ky.

NOT THE SAME UNCLE JERRY

Circumstances Had Made a Change in His Position, and He Wanted It to Be Understood.

At Sumter, N. C., there was a large crowd of colored people at the depot as the train pulled in. An old bald-headed Uncle Jerry had his head out of the coach set apart for colored passengers, and a man on the platform recognized him and called out:

"Hello, Misser Stivers! Is dat yo'?"

The old man looked straight at him but made no response.

"Hello, Misser Stivers!"

No response.

"Say, Misser Stivers, has yo' lostes yo' hearing?" persisted the man as he drew nearer.

"Boy, was yo' talkin' to me?" demanded the old man.

"Sartin. What's de matter?"

"Boy, does yo' want anything of me?"

"Why, how yo' talk! Reckon yo' has got de hoodoo."

"Does yo' evidently reckon yo' knows me?"

"Of co'se I knows yo'. Yo' is ole man Stivers."

"When did yo' know me?"

"Las' fall. Why, I dun worked wid yo' fur three months."

"An' when yo' dun worked wid me what was I a-doin'?"

"Drivin' dem mewls fur Kurnel Johnson."

"Exactly sah. But I want yo' to understan' dat dere is a heap o' difference atwixt drivin' dem mewls fur Kurnel Johnson an' ridin' on de kivered kyars along wid white folks. I might a-knowed yo' last fall, sah, but if yo' desiar to permeate any alongated conversation wid me yo' mus' git some responsible gem'len to introduce yo'."—Chicago Record-Herald.

DON'T NEED TO BE LABELED

Any Man of Sense Would Know That These Two Stories Were Merely Fables.

Once upon a time there was a beaten golfer who admitted that he had missed no short putts—and that his winning rival had "gobbled" no long ones; who confessed that he was on his game and that while beaten by the margin of 3 and 2, without great luck the count would have been 8 and 6.

Moral—They backed him up against a bunker and shot him at sunrise before he became more violent.

Once upon a time there was a fan who left the ball park and called out to a friend:

"Greatest game of the year, pal; they beat us 3 to 2; but if the ump hadn't slipped us a couple of close ones, the count would have been 3 to 0. They played better ball and won on the level."

Moral—They didn't even wait until sunrise to pot this guy. Another ten minutes, and he might have been beyond all human control.—Grantland Rice, in Collier's Weekly.

Here's The Plumb Bob

It's just another proof that Tubular Cream Separators are just up to the minute—miles ahead of anyother. No other machide has it.

What's It For?

It enables you to level the Sharples Dairy Tubular Cream Separator in a minute—quicker than you could find the spirit level you must use to level all other separators. A glance at the plumb bob, hanging there on the back of the Tubular, will always tell you whether the Tubular remains level. In that way you get the very best work out of the Tubular, for all Separators should be kept level to do their best work.

Tubulars have dozens of exclusive fine points and are sold on the level. Bring the wife in. See how simple, perfect and different from others Tubulars are.

EAR NEVER STOPS GROWING

The Only Portion of the Human Anatomy, According to Physicians, Which Does This.

Persons who have large ears in their youthful days are decidedly unlucky, according to students of anatomy, for no other portion of the human body is so ambitious in its growth. We get old and shrivel up and decrease in stature, but the ear still grows.

A woman with small ears at twenty probably will have medium-sized ears at forty and large ears at sixty. Again, it is said, as the result of the examination of 40,000 pairs of ears, that probably no person in the world has ears perfectly matched. In most people the two ears differ perceptibly, not only in shape, but in size. Frequently they are not placed on the head at exactly the same angle or at the same height.

It is declared by those who have devoted their time and abilities to the study of ears that the age of a person can be judged by them with great accuracy by an expert.

After the age of ten, ears assume an increased form and give the clue to the age of the owner. Nordau, Lombroso and others lay great stress upon the ear as an indication of character; yet some of the best men we meet have outrageous ears, while almost everybody can recall some bold, bad man of his acquaintance who has small, well formed and well placed ears.

NOT AN OCCASION FOR MIRTH

Thoughtless People Laughed at Humorous Sight, but There Was Deep Pathos in Incident.

Why will we be so much amused at the other fellow's woe? The other fellow in this story was driving, and the horse was going at a clip, so the driver had his hands full to steer safely through the crowded streets. The only other occupant of the conveyance was a large nanny goat, standing on the seat. She was somewhat uneasy at the unusual means of locomotion, and being of a loving disposition, she would snuggle up to the driver and lick across the face, and nose his hair whenever the swaying vehicle gave her a chance. To a bus full of people with nothing to do but look on it was very funny, and calls and jeers to the busy driver did not add to his peace of mind. But had the hooters only known that the goat was being hurried through the city streets to save a little life!

Not far from Washington square there is a little house where a young mother lay dead and a sick infant was crying for comfort, and the man with the queer passenger had that picture before him while nanny and the onlookers made free with his dignity.—New York Press.

Wasted Eloquence.

Having recently escaped annihilation by the width of a flying coattail, the minister meant every word of his sermon against motor cars. So genuine was his emotion that he was able to preach without notes.

Ordinarily he refrained from desecrating the pulpit with a text on mundane affairs. But motor cars were different. They had been instrumental in sending so many people to heaven that they had almost ceased to be mundane.

In anathematising the people who run their cars on Sundays and run them too fast the young man surpassed himself in eloquence. He knew he had spoken well, but he wanted somebody else to tell him so. After church he asked the candid parishioner what he thought of the sermon. The candid parishioner looked out upon the smiling blue sky, the glinting sunbeams, the opening leaves.

"It sounded all right," he said, "but I doubt if it will do much good, because there wasn't a soul here that owns a motor car to hear it."

Many French Playwrights.

Playwriting seems to be more of a hobby than a profession in France. Judging by the figures of the French Society of Dramatic Authors. The members of the society number, all told, 5,400. But during the last two years 60 of this number have sufficed to furnish the dramatic fare of the community, comprising every work in prose and verse staged throughout the country in the theaters and cafe concerts. The other 5,340 members of the society are awaiting their turn to cater for the public tastes, and in all probability will wait a long time, for the majority of French theaters have their accepted playwrights, whom they commission to write their plays, and the lucky 60 jealously guard their privilege and do all they can to exclude new aspirants. The members of the society include recruits from nearly every profession and calling—lawyers, army and navy officers, business men, clerks, etc.—who assidnously produce works which never see the light of day.

Hunger the Least of His Troubles.

A Dayton, Ohio, newspaper, in reciting some of the tragic scenes which occurred in that city during the recent flood, recounts this episode, which goes to show that even the most awful disasters are not without their occasional tinges of humor: A fat man was sitting astride the roof of a barn floating complacently down the stream. Some of the rescuers on the bank yelled to him and asked him if he was hungry. "Hungry? No! There are fourteen hens in the hayloft and they lay twelve eggs a day!"

MIGHTY SWIRL OF WATERS

World's Greatest Whirlpool at Junction of Two Great South American Rivers.

In the Wide World Mr. W. O. Symon gives an interesting account of his experience in South America. In regard to the junction of the Madre de Dios and Inambari river Mr. Symon says:

Just before the junction of the latter river divides into two arms, with an island some two miles long in between. The right arm, which is usually the safer for navigation, was at the time of our arrival, impassable, owing to the recent and excessive drought that had formed the formation of perilous rapids. We had, in consequence, to take the wide left arm, down which the main volume of the river was flowing.

The reader can imagine the enormous force of water that was being shot into the Madre de Dios when he realizes that the Inambari at its left arm projection was 300 yards wide, perhaps 30 feet in depth, and flowing at six knots an hour. This great mass of water met the Madre de Dios, itself 400 yards wide here, at a right angle. The current of the Inambari being faster than the Madre de Dios, the former river cut its way through the latter, right across to the farther bank. There the Inambari was thrown back, and surged around in a huge circle 200 yards in diameter to join up again with the water flowing to the bank. The whirlpool thus formed was probably one of the largest in the world. (I have purposely used past tense in this description, as the course of the Inambari is constantly changing its mouth.) The circles of seething water curled inward and downward, screw fashion, to their center, which appeared as a great hole, at least six feet below the level of the outer rim.

NEWEST IDEA IN EDUCATION

Cinematograph Films Are to Be Put to Use in the Higher German Schools.

According to official information recently received by the United States bureau of education, the use of moving pictures in education has had a significant impetus in German government circles. The Prussian ministry of education is now considering the feasibility of employing cinematograph films in some of the higher educational institutions, as applicable to certain courses of instruction, and a number of film manufacturers have been given an opportunity to show the authorities what films they have that are adated to educational purposes.

A well known philanthropist has recently donated two full equipped moving picture machines to the schools of Berlin, one to be used in the Continuation Institute for Higher Teachers and the other in the high schools of Greater Berlin. Moving picture films are now available in Germany for anatomical, biological and bacteriological courses, and it is believed there that an enormous field for them will be opened up when educators fully realise their value.

Monarchs Well Protected.

Though the days have gone by when the monarch was protected during the hours of slumber by an attendant sleeping in a bed drawn across the door of his chamber, King George is by no means left unprotected during the night. Not only is the outside of the palace guarded by soldiers and detectives, but several night watchmen pace up and down the corridors through the hours of darkness. They are shod in thick felt slippers, so as not to wake the royal sleeper, and one of them is always near the king's room till his majesty is called by his valet in the morning.

Every door and window in the place is frequently examined and it would be impossible for any intruder to get in without his presence being discovered in a few minutes. Thus the king is as well protected as the czar of Russia, who has a guard of armed Cossacks outside his room, or the king of Spain, who is watched by a squad of specially picked soldiers, who keep the keys of all the doors during the night.

Cat Saved the Canary.

A lady had a tame bird which she was in the habit of letting out of its cage every day. One morning as it was picking crumbs of bread off the carpet, her pet cat, who always before showed great kindness for the bird, seized it on a sudden, and jumped with it in her mouth upon a table. The lady was much alarmed for the fate of her favorite, but on turning about instantly discerned the cause. The door had been left open, and a strange cat had just come into the room! After turning it out, her own cat came down from her place of safety, and dropped the bird without having done it the smallest injury.

Future Clothes to Be Paper?

Paper clothes were worn by the Japanese troops during the war with Russia, and they were found to be very serviceable and much warmer than those of cloth. Paper dressing-gowns, ball-robes, and similar articles of attire are now being turned out by the cart-load in England, France, Germany, and other European countries. The paper of which they are made is of the "blotter" variety, and after being treated by a new process is dyed in various colors or printed with a pretty floral design. Even gloves are made of paper; the principal claim to advantage being that they are susceptible of being cleaned many times.

SOURCE OF GOOD AND HARM

Volcanoes on Island of Luzon Occasionally Devastate, but Also Supply Fertilizers.

Luzon, the largest island of the Philippine group, is graced by a chain of volcanoes, extinct and active, from north to south. Many of these have subterranean connection, so that when one turns loose its fury it is just possible that a sister many miles away will do the same. These volcanoes have a commercial value to the islands, and if it were not for the havoc they now and then create they might be looked upon as veritable blessings. It is the volcanic ash from these mountains that produces fertilizer for the finest hemp in the world, and the world's hemp supply comes solely from the Philippines.

Mayon volcano, in Albay province, southern Luzon, is one of the most beautiful active volcanoes in the world. Viewed from certain points, it is a perfect cone, resembling an inverted letter V. Mayon is constantly active, and at its base lies buried the town of old Daraga, with nothing but the old church roof and steeple sticking above the ground today. The town of Legaspi, one of the largest hemp ports in the world, also lies at majestic Mayon's base, on the Gulf of Albay, a body of water, which legends say "has no bottom."

Many Americans, among them some noted men, have reached the summit. But a flag supported by an iron staff placed there by one party was soon destroyed by sulphur fumes shot up from the crater. The mountain rises to a height of over 8,000 feet, and many interesting photos of the crater have been made by the Philippine bureau of science.

This volcano is one of the most interesting to be found anywhere in the whole world, by all reports.—Technical World Magazine.

COULD ONE DOUBT HIS LOVE?

Devotion Almost Sublime Exhibited by Harold After a Test That Was Really Severe.

She knew how to bake biscuits. But that was all, for she had only spent two years at a cooking school before her recent marriage.

"O, goody!" she cried. "I'll give Harold a surprise. We'll have a biscuit supper."

Harold came home early as he had every day since they started housekeeping. He kissed her as they met in the vestibule, then in the hall, the ante-room and so on out into the dining room.

"First course, biscuits!" she twittered, as they sat down to dinner.

Harold devoured her with his eyes, devonred the biscuits with his teeth and avidity.

"Second course, biscuits!" she carolled.

"How novel!" exclaimed Harold, and devoured seven more.

The third course was biscuits, and as for the fourth, biscuits. It was a four-course dinner, and Harold did justice to each course. For dessert there were biscuits.

The next day after Harold had been pronounced out of danger and the doctor had assured him that the acute indigestion would not return if he was careful about what he ate, the young husband called his wife to his bedside. She approached with great trepidation. Biscuits had not been mentioned between them in the intervals that he was conscious during the night. Now she expected to hear the dreadful word.

"Dearest," began Harold, "I think I must have eaten something"—she was clinging to the bedpost for support—"I think I must have eaten something that did not agree with me at the club for lunch yesterday.'

Fish Fighting Popular Sport.

Were some one to tell you that so far as gameness was concerned you had all the vitality and spunk of a fish, you probably wonld believe he was either joking or intended to insult you, yet such is not the case, for there are fish that are game, spunky, and possess great vitality.

The particular fish mentioned is the Malayan fighting fish, known generally in Siam as the Pla-Kat, but elsewhere as the Betta Pugnax. These fish are bred in Siam and some other countries just for sport, and their ability to fight means much to their backers.

The Pla-Kat is a veritable fighting cock of the deep, and it is an inherent trait with it to fight rather than to eat. At some of the big contests, when the best fish are pitted against each other, thousands of spectators gather to see the contest, and small fortunes often change hands on the result.

Truth Made a Hit.

The late Senator Marcus A. Hanna always delighted to tell a story on a Cleveland friend in the iron manufacturing business in that city.

This iron merchant, according to Senator Hanna, was in New York on a bond selling mission for a subsidiary company in which he was interested.

The aid of a well known Wall street house was sought and the head of the firm was negotiating for the bonds with the Lake City man.

"Where do you live?" suddenly asked the financier of the Clevelander.

"Lakewood avenue, Cleveland," came the quick response.

"Come on out and get a drink," said the capitalist. "You are the first man I ever met in my life from Cleveland who did not claim to live on Euclid avenue."

PROCLAMATION.

It appearing that there is a vacancy in the office of Circuit Clerk in Boone County Kentucky, caused by the resignation of J. A. Duncan, the regularly elected clerk, and said vacancy existing three months before the next regular election, at which county officers may be elected for the the year nineteen hundred and thirteen, an election is now oedered to be heid in Boone county on the regular election day, for the purpose of electing a clerk to fill said vacancy; and the sheriff of Boone county is now ordered to call said election, and give proper notice thereof by publication as required by law, and to cause the polls to be opened for that purpose.

Given under my hand this 19th day of April, 1913.

J. W. CAMMACK.
Judge of Boone Circuit Court and Fifteenth Judicial District of Kentucky.
Copy Attest.—
CHAS. MAURER, Clerk.

In pursuance of the above order I hereby call an election to fill the vacancy in the office of circuit clerk, which election will be held Tuesday, Nov. 4, 1913.

FARMER BOYS' ENCAMPMENT.

A Free Trip to The Kentucky State Fair for One Hundred and Twenty Boys.

The Kentucky State Fair Management and the College of Agriculture have completed plans for a Farm Boys' Encampment that will give an opportunity for one boy from each of the 120 counties of the State to visit the Kentucky State Fair for a whole week without expense. The purpose of this encampment is to extend the educational advantages of the Fair to the farms of the State and to stimulate a greater interest in the State Fair by spreading throughout the one hundred and twenty counties its real worth through these farm boys.

SELECTION OF THE BOYS.

The selection of the boys will be made on competitive examination of answers by a member of the State Board of Agriculture and a member of the Faculty of the Agricultural College. The applicant should send all answers to J. L. Dent, Secretary of State Fair, who will forward same to the Executive Committee for completion. This Committee will receive all applications, as set forth above, and mark all answers submitted to them.

The applicant must be of good moral character, willing to co-operate in making the encampment a success; be between the ages of 15 and 18 yrs. and be actual residents and workers upon the farm. No boy who has ever been enrolled in any College of Agriculture in this or any other State will be eligible to compete (this does not exclude boys who have attended the the Agricultural Department in tee High School).

Each boy will be required to answer lists of questions following:

1. How can the corn crop of your county be improved?

2. How do greater numbers of live stock usually make a more prosperous farmer?

3. Why are pure bred live stock better than scrub?

(Answer each question in not more than 100 words.)

All answers must be in the hands of the Secretary of the State Fair before August 1st. The committee will read and mark them at once and notify the Secretary of the State Fair of the name and address of the boy standing highest, which boy will be the one entitled to the free trip to the State Fair as a member of the Farm Boys' Encampment from his county. The local committee will keep a record of the markings of all the contestants, and the boys standing second and third in their markings will be designated as first and second alternates; the first to be selected in case the winner cannot come to the Fair, and the second alternate to be selected in case the winner nor first alternate can come.

The Burlington base ball team visited Lakeland, on the fourth, where they were defeated 11 to 10 in an exciting slugging match in which the Burlington aggregation poled 18 hits while Lakeland had 21. The boys were delighted with the treatment they received at the hands of Dr. Peddicord and others in authority at Lakeland. The game was strung out until it was impossible for the boys to make the train on which to return Friday night, consequently they did not reach Burlington until 9 a. m. Saturday.

The Recorder has two obituaries on hand that will appear next week.

HOLD THE FORT.

Fellow members of 1909 pool, of Boone county, there has come a time in the history of our Farmers' pool or organization that a decided stroke must be made. Our common enemy, the Tobacco Trust, has already captured some of our strong holds while we have been sleeping. Some of our lambs have strayed from our fold and the wolf has caught and skined them and is wearing the sheep coat and has gotten into our folds and is straying the flock on the inside. They are being financed and backed up by the Trust and have brought hundreds of suits against us and harrassed us in every way which has caused delays in business and an enormous expense to our Burley Tobacco people. We have gained every suit brought against us except part of the last one, when the court said the stock would have voting powers to elect officers of the company, to which we agree and are now issuing the stock as fast as the warehouse receipts can be sent to the Secretary at Lexington.

The American Tobacco Co., The Tobacco Trust, our enemy, have agents in every county in the tobacco belt buying and securing proxies to vote your stock at next October election to disband our organization and have had two public meetings in Lexington and Georgetown, and have selected a committee of five to cast that vote. They have selected a majority, three of them straight out Trust men, our avowed enemies. One of them the chairman, is a Trust tobasso buyer; one a Louisville Tobacco warehouse buyer, another a non-pooler, who would never have anything to do with our company. The other two only to fill in.

We called our Boone County Board of Control with as many of the growers as we could reach by telephone to meet in Burling ton, last Monday, and had Mr. Stucy and Mr. Borne to explain and place the situation before them, and we selected our committee of three, chosen from our friends, to cast Boone county's vote. We also appointed a solicitor in all precincts that we could get men to act. These solicitors have authority to collect proxies anywhere in the county.

Now, it is up to you who own stock in this company. If you want to perpetuate our organization, vote or give your proxy to our friends, and let them give Boone county's vote to whom they think will best preserve our organization. If not and you are dissatisfied give your proxy to you enemy and let them dissolve us, and go back to 1904 and 1905, and take trust medicine. I would not now contract the 1913 crop of tobacco for over 5 cents if our organization is disbanded.

While I have represented Boone county on the District Board ever since its organization, am not not now a candidate for that place. We have selected three good men to cast your vote and every man owning stock is privileged to go to Lexington to vote his stock if he desires. I expect to attend the election in Lexington and vote my stock, and any one so desiring can send me his proxy, and I will take pleasure in in serving him. I advise that you select someone other than me to represent you on the District Board. Most respectfully,

J. C. HUGHES.

Republicans Cannot Vote.

In some parts in the county where Republicans want to take a hand in naming the Democratic niminees for the county offices they are saying that the law says that where the Republicans have no candidates in the primary election they must be allowed to vote for the Democratic candidates. The law says no such a thing. The primary election law says this in regard to qualifications of voters at the primary election: "In precincts where registration is required, no elector, except those entitled to be specially registered as hereinafter provided, shall be entitled to vote in any primary unless he is registered in the registration book of said precinct for the preceding year, as affiliating with the party whose ballot he offers to vote. If so registered he shall be entitled to vote the ballot of the party with which he is registered, and no other. In other precincts qualified electors shall be allowed to vote only the ballot of that party with which they declare their affiliation." It is plain that the Republicans who votes for the Democrats at the primary election next August must declare that he is identified with the Democratic party before the officers of election can issue him a ballot.

New Election Officers Must Be Appointed.

Frankfort, July 8.—Election officer mist be specially appointed by the County Boards of Election Commissioners for the August primary. In answer to inquiries on this point Attorney General Garnett today stated that the elec tion officers appointed last fall for the November election cannot serve for the primary unless reappointed.

Hubert Brady says he saw a fish in the Lonesome Hole down on Gunpowder creek that he believes will weigh seventy-five pounds. It is c carp.

The Recorder goes to press too soon to announce the wedding which is to take place in Burlington this week.

STATE NEWS

The development of our mineral section is best illustrated where in one county in Eastern Kentucky a contract was let last week for 1,000 houses to be built. It would take 100 years to build that many houses in some of our counties.—Elizabethtown News.

A young lady in Indiana writes to ask if it is "really a fact that Eliza crossed the river between Dover and Ripley on the floating ice, as described in Uncle Tom's Cabin?" She did not, Lillian—at least not during the past week or ten days, anyhow.—Dover News.

Kentucky produces and ships more spring lambs than any other State in the Union and they are largely purchased by the most discriminating market of the country. But very few of them are from Ballard county; we raise dogs down here.—La Center Advance.

There are plenty of fellows who could teach a better school than those who teach, preach a better sermon than those who preach run a better business, and publish a better paper than those who do their best. Yes, the woods are full of them, but they neither preach, teach, run a business nor publish a better paper.—Jackson Times.

If the law against carrying concealed weapons were enforced there would be fewer killings, because there would be fewer gun carriers. Or if the gun carrier were compelled to take out a license, giving good and sufficient reasons for wanting to carry a gun, there would be fewer killings. The way to stop killings is to begin at the foundation—the gun carrying habit.—Lawrenceburg News.

We have long heard it said that the "grubworm turns to a persimmon tree," and we have pretty strong evidence that this is true. Mr. W. D. Crute, who lives about two miles southwest of here, brought to this office a few days ago a grubworm which he plowed up, which had two green "sprouts" about two inches long growing out from its body about one half inch back from its head. The worm, of course, was dead. —Cadiz Record.

Much of perhaps the best wheat crop grown in the Trenton country for years is now in the shock and will soon be ready for the thresher. The grain is said to be the best in many years and should bring top price. Of course farmers may expect the price to open at 80 or 85 cents, but Trenton farmers don't have to take it. They raise dollar wheat and must get it. Sit on your sacks, boys, and wait awhile unless the dollar price is offered you, then do as you think best.—Todd County Progress.

D. Ward King, the man who made the spit log road drag famous, is in the city conferring with the county and city officials with reference to having the drag adopted here. Mr. King does not sell the drag. He only tells the people how to make it themselves and how to use it after it is made. He has been all over the country on this mission and last February an effort was made to get him here for the two-day good roads convention, but other engagements prevented his coming.—Hopkinsville New Era.

John Wyman's cistern went dry a few days ago, and noticing a damp place out in the field he went out and dug down in the ground a few feet when he found an old cypress curbing. He continued digging, and further down found a brick curbing, made many years ago. He now has a good well, with water six feet deep, and it is cool and pure. This is on the Joe Wright farm and is supposed to have been originally dug over seventy years ago.—Mayfield Messenger.

The Courier Journal says: "The fact that Kentucky is to receive $22,50 0 from the Federal Government for educational and demonstration work among the farmers should give much impetus to the movement for better farming. Indeed, it should, but experiments along this line have shown that in some sections of Kentucky the farmers do not seem to want to learn, even when the educational and demonstration work is free as air. Usually a political convention or speaking will draw a larger crowd of farmers to town than a farmers' institute. Both are important, but the latter should easily transcend the former.—Hartford Herald.

The Frankfort State Journal reports that a negro convict who had been lost within the walls of the prison for many years, has been discovered, and would be paroled. Such cases turn up now and then, but how it is possible no one on the outside can well imagine. There is or ought to be a record of every prisoner every day, so that it can be determined whose time expires by limitation, who is eligible to parole and who is in line, so that escapes may be determined. It seems like a very poor system of bookkeeping where a prisoner originally sentenced for five years should be kept on for more than twenty-one years. If the prisoner doesn't kick, and we can get past with it without a big damage suit the general public ought not to kick, except at the inefficiency of the prison system.—Bowling Green Messenger.

Samuel Petitt, who resides down on Gunpowder creek, has seven acres of as fine tobacco as there is in the county, much of it having twenty leaves.

To the Voters of Boone County:

In reference to the questions that I have been asked me by my opponent at his different meetings, I will reply through the Recorder so as my statment can not be misconstrued.

Question—Do you indorse the present school administration of our county? If not, to what policies do you object?

Answer—I endorse the progressive spirit of any good cause, I object to the policy of closing any school, and hiring children hauled at a cost greater than a good teacher could be employed. Our small schools are as essential to the farmer as our High Schools are to the different professions.

(2). What would be your policy in reference to County High Schools and High Schools in graded school districts?

Ans.—If a community wants a graded school with Higher branches taught I would encourage it, but this is now a dead issue in our county, is now well supplied either with graded schools kept up by the local taxation or our county High Schools kept up by county taxation.

(3) What would be your policy in reference to consolidation?

Ans.—This is purely a local issue—remember our roads are bad, my advise to the farmers is "Keep your Schools."

(4) What will you do in reference to taxes?

Ans.—I believe our Fiscal Court will be composed of men of good judgment, and I surely would not ask of them only what in their judgment would promote the welfare of our schools.

I furthermore deny that I had anything to do with abolishing the Pleasant Ridge School "Being no officer of the county or district how could I?"

The Union Graded School took a part of the Pleasant Ridge District, a vote of the taxpayers of the remaining part of the Pleasant Ridge and the Florence districts was then taken to establish a Graded School at Florence. In this way that school was abolished and no other.

If elected Superintendent I shall be your servant, and not your boss—I have no other occupation, and shall devote all my time to the office. I do not care to discuss these issues any further, and if elected I shall be thankful if not it will be all the same. Yours truly,

—Adv. A. M. YEALEY.

The Situation in Grant County.

(Grant Co. News.)

Commonwealth Attorney, M. L. Downs and his opponent, John J. Howe, both delivered addresses at several different points in the county during the week. Whether either of them have been benefited by the campaign or not is hard to tell.

Howe seems to be a big favorite with the people of this county and the prediction is freely made that he will carry the county by at least three to one over his opponent and he may exceed that figure. Downs, however has picked up some strength in this conty since his announcement as a candidate. Whether he will continue to gain strength and give his opponent a run for his money is a matter that will be largely determlued by the course of events during the remaining four weeks of the campaign.—Adv.

Rocks do not grow in the sense that a plant grows. They may increase by accretion, and they may undergo chemical change. The old sea bed, being stone. The volcanic ash and lava strewn over the plains tufa, hard enough for building stone. The pebbly shore of a river becomes conglomerate. The simple mineral does grow, however, when it takes a crystal form. The sparkling prism of a quartz increases from an atom to a crystal as large as a forearm by a process of addition and assimilation, wonderfully slow, but beautifully regular, exactly as crystals of ice form on the windowpane.

Milk became a vary important part of the food of families in the colonial days of the eighteenth century. In 1728 a discussion took place in the Boston newspapers as to the expense of keeping a fainily of "middling figure." These writers all named only bread and milk for breakfast and supper. As cows increased in number, milk, of coarse, became more frequently used. Rev. Mr. Higginson in 1630 wrote that milk cost in Salem but a penny a quart, while another minister John Cotton, said that milk and ministers were the only things cheap in New England.

Forest Brown, candidate for county clerk, met with quite an accident on the road between Heron and Bullittsville one day last week. His horse scared at an auto standing at the road side and when it whirled with the buggy Mr. Brown was thrown over a wire fence, and one of his trouser legs was badly torn, while his flesh was slightly lacerated. Fortunately the horse did not run.

The change in the temperature that came last Sunday was welcomed by all.

Numerous automobiles traversed the Burlington and Florence pike, last Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. G. S. Walrath, of Belleview, spent last Saturday with Burlington friends.

County Judge Cason turned his ankle one day last week since which time he has been on the limp.

A nice shower of rain fell here last Saturday night and coming at the hour it did vegetation got full benefit of it.

A party of Burilngton hayriders took shelter in Hubert Beemon's barn out on the Florence pike during the rain, last Saturday night.

W. D. Cropper stepped in a hole last Thursday night as he was taking his horse to the pasture and sprained his ankle badly.

Allen Black is pitching great ball again this season. He is with the Lexington team and seldom loses a game. Rah for Black.

Burlington Masonic Lodge is enjoying one of its semi-occasional booms. It has two candidates on the carpet and three petitions pending.

The Kentucky sheep quarantine has been raised, and you can now ship sheep without having its sign any kind of papers, so we are informed.

C. W. Zumbeil and John C. Bentler have formed a partnership for handling coal at Erlanger. The style of the firm will be The J. C. Bentler Coal Co.

Taylorsport Baptist church gave an ice cream social recently at which $107.15 were the receipts. It was the most successful church social of the season.

There have been many inquiries for living spaces in wells, caves and other places where the mercury tube does not show a batting record above 100.

J. M. Eddins has purchased of B. B. Hume a five passenger Ford auto to be used in carrying the Burlington and Erlanger mail. This is truly a progressive age.

The boys in the trenches were in Burlington from all parts of the county, last Monday, seeking dope in regard to results at the approaching primary election.

Crops in the county began needing rain again last week. It now looks as though the potato crop is badly damaged, and potatoes will be small and not many in the hill.

W. J. Brell, of Erainger, who, several days ago, was badly hurt by an explosion of gasoline he was using cleaning a cistern, is recovering from his injuries nicely.

The Burlington and Belleview ball teams will play at Burlington, next Saturday afternoon, when the local team expects to put up the best game it has played this season.

Two fires were seen by Burlington people, last Saturday night one of which it is said was a barge barn at Miamitown, O. The other fire which was in the southeast, has not been located.

Don't forget to attend the game of ball at the local park next Saturday afternoon, as the Burlington team's exchequer is about depleted. Belleview will be on hand with its strong line up.

Marcellus Riddell was overcome by heat last Saturday afternoon while assisting to put a load of goods in his warerooom, but recovered from the effects of the prostration in about twenty-four houre.

Notice is hereby given that I will prosecute to the extent of the law any person who gives or sells my son, Bryan, any whisky, beer or any other intoxicating liquors. James W. Aylor.

Hubert Brady's position on the ballot at the primary election will be No. 3 in the race for assessor, and No 5 is the position in which he plays base ball.

Mrs. Joseph Huey will give a linen shower at her home near Union, today, Thursday, in honor of Miss Helen Dickey, bride-elect of Atty. J. G. Tomlin, of Walton.

The members of Gunpowder Baptist church take this means of thanking those who assisted in any way in the repairs on their church building, and assure them that their assistance is appreciated.

In some fields tobacco is making a very poor showing while in others it has fine color and is making very growth. It is too soon to begin making prediction as to final outcome of the crop.

Joseph Case, of Crittenden, Grant county, attended county court here last Monday. Mr. Case reports the crops in his neighborhood as very satisfactory, although a rain is needed. He has harvested a large clover crop and has considerable timothy to cut.

Supt. Crouch is having considerable trouble securing an operator for the telephone exchange. Miss Sharma Jackson, of Lawrenceburg, is temporary assistant of Miss Sheba Roberts. Miss Jackson was at the board a while before they moved from Burlington to Indianaa.

The small boys of Burlington consumed a generous supply of fire crackers, sky rockets and Roman candles in celebrating the fourth. Along that line their patriotism seemed unbounded and for several hours at night the central part of the town was almost a sheet of fire.

While putting a floor in his barn loft one day last week, James White, of Flickertown, fell several feet to the ground, breaking two of his ribs and injuring himself otherwise considerably. Being a very heavy man it is a wonder that Mr. White was not hurt worse than he was.

M. L. Downs, candidate for Commonwealth's Atty. made a short speech at the court house last Monday in which he attacked the political record of his opponent, Mr. Howe, all along the line. Mr. Howe was not present altho being advertised to speak here that day he being called home to attend the funeral of his uncle J. T. Winslow on Monday.

Last Saturday night lightning struck the residence of Adam Conrad, near Dry Ridge, Grant county, and knocked the chimneys off, tore off many of the shingles and considerable weatherboarding and burnt his telephone wires in two. Fortunately a conflagration did not result. During the same storm a large barn at Gardnersville was struck by lightning and burned.

The Master Commissioner's sale of the Kottmyer ferry property at Constance last Monday brought a large number of the people of that neighborhood to town. There were only two or three bidders and the bidding soon reached $26,000 where it ceased, the property being knocked off to a party who bid for Henry Kottmyer who owned a half interest in it. The sale was made to settle the partnership between Henry Kottmyer and his brother, Louie, they having purchased it from their father, Chas. Kottmyer a short time before Loule's death.

Bert Smith, carrier on Burlington R. D. 2 had his weekly installment of bad luck, last Tuesday, when at the foot of the Jas. Ryle hill on Gunpowder creek, the horse attached to his cart became frightened from some un known cause and shied while Mr. Smith was in the attitude of taking from the pouch some mail to place in a box. On account of his broken arm Mr. Smith could not recover his position in the cart and fell out, hurting his elbows considerably. The horse began running and knowing that his little boy who was driving for him could not control the animal Mr. Smith called to him to jump out of the cart, which he did and escaped injury. The horse ran up the hill which is about a mile long, leaving behind at intervals portion of the cart until only one shaft hung to him when he was stopped by James McAtee at Beech Grove, about two miles from where he started. The horse was about exhausted. Mr. Smith and his son gathered up their mail and came on until they reached the captured runaway, when they mounted him and road on to Burlington, and when the postoffice was reached the horse reared up and fell backwards, coming very nearly failing on Mr. Smith and his son.

Kenton county has bought and made free that part of the Covington and Lexington turnpike, eight miles, lying between Covington and the Boone and Kenton line between Florence and Erlanger. The pike cost Kenton county $17,250 and its purchase is one of the best moves it was possible to make for the merchants in Covington. The condition of the road will be improved and it will be a great commercial feeder to Covington. It is only a question of a few years when the same pike will be made free thru Boone county, it now being free thru Grant county. The gates at Erlanger and the top of Willow Run hill were thrown open on Wednesday of last week.

John Rogers, of Belleview neighborhood, has four acres of as fine black mustard greens as were ever produced in this country, and he is trying to locate a market for the immense stock as the supply exceeds many times the demands for that article of food in the cities of Belleview and McVille his nearest markets. It was not Mr. Rogers' intention to become so heavily overstocked with mustard greens as to glut all the markets within his zone, and it was the result of his merchant filling thru mistake an order for rape seed with black mustard seed. Mr. Rogers is a very successful farmer and his success or failure with his field of mustard is being awaited with much interest by his neighbors.

A large crowd attended the ordination of deacons at Gunpowder Baptist church last Thursday, and although the day was excessively hot the people were comparatively comfortable and enjoyed the services. At noon a long table was supplied with an abundance of everything that an ordinary person could crave and when the large crowd had partaken to its entire satisfaction enough remained to have gladened 500 more hungry people. The good cooks in that neighborhood have a reputation for overdoing matters on occasions like that of last Thursday and they will never lessen that reputation. The two members ordained deacons, of the church, Asa and Hubert McMullen, are excellent gentlemen, and an honor to the cause in which they are enlisted.

M. L. Downs, of Carrollton, candidate for Commonwealth's Attorney in this judicial district, is making a speaking campaign in this county this week, and is said with telling effect. He spoke at Hebron Tuesday night and at Belleview Wednesday night. The campaign for that office is beginning to warm up considerably and the friends of both of the candidates are claiming an overwhelming victory.

At the commencement exercises of the Kentucky Wesleyan College, John J. Howe, delivered an address to the alumni of the institution and we copy part of the comment of the Winchester Democrat, as follows:

"The alumni address was delivered at the Methodist church Monday night by the Hon. John J. Howe, of Carrollton, Ky., a former student at the college and now an attorney and candidate for Commonwealth's Attorney in his district. Mr. Howe's address whose subject was "Modern Judases," was a strong plea for more interest in government and education. His remarks were well received and showed careful preparation and scrutizing study. He quoted statistics on the prevalence of crime and the laxity of law enforcement.

O. P. Phipps and family, Chas. Maurer and family, Chas. Fowler and N. E. Riddell celebrated the fourth with poles and lines on Gunpowder creek. Several fish and a fine lot of turtles were caught, among the lot being a three and one-half pound blue cat fish, which figured in a combination catch pulled off by Fowler, Riddell and Maurer.

The tobacco growers had a meeting at the court house last Monday, which was addressed by several speakers who favored standing by the Burley Tobacco Co., while Atty. J. G. Tomlin, opposed to such a stand.

The meeting chose the following men to cast the vote of the county at the election to be held next October:

B. H. Berkshire, Petersburg.
R. B. Huey, Burlington.
W. M. Whitson, Verona.

The following were chosen solicitors:

B. H. Berkshire, Harry Stevens, Petersburg.
A. W. Corn, Bullittsville.
L. L. Stephens, Tim Sandford, Belleview.
R. B. Huey, R. S. Cowen, Burlington.

To Bring Up Fido Correctly.

A writer in Country Life in America gives some advice on the bringing up of a dog. As he tells it, the process looks easy enough. The first and most important lesson for a pup to learn is to stop anything he may be doing when you say "Stop," and to continue when you say "All right." If well learned, this will explain to him all future commands. After this comes the lesson to lie down when you command "Down," and to stay down while you leave him. For this latter it is best to tie him to something, and then if he does not drop when you call "Down" from a distance, return quickly and, scolding, push him down forcibly. A caress and a taste of food should be his reward if he does right.

Quaint Charity.

A quaint charity exists in South Shields, Eng., which operates, according to the will of the deceased donor, once a year. It is known as the "Winterbottom Awards for Unmarried Female Domestic Servants," and the chief object is to reward domestics for faithful and satisfactory service. This year the candidates numbered 16, and all fulfilled the conditions, which are that they shall have not less than ten years' service in one situation. The last awards ranged from $15 down to $12.50, according to length of service.

GIVES PHYSICIANS NEW IDEA

Experiment Seems to Disprove Notion About the Spreading of Dread Disease Germs.

The power of a small glass partition to prevent the spread of infectious diseases has been known in the hospitals of Europe for several years, but is only becoming recognized in America. In the contagious wards of the Brooklyn children's hospital glass partitions about five feet high are placed between the beds. And the effect is really astonishing. In one bed may be a child with pneumonia, in the next one with scarlet fever, in the next one with measles. Cerebro-spinal meningitis, diphtheria and other such diseases may be represented in the other beds, but since the installation of the glass partitions no child "catches" the disease that his neighbor has.

And yet the air circulates freely all around and above the glass partitions, and one would think that the germs would spread almost as easily as if these were not there. Yet experience has proved that this is not so.

Physicians are revising their views about the spread of contagious diseases through the air. Some are even ridiculing the fumigation of rooms. The suggestion is that most of the pathogenic germs die very quickly in the air; that persons must come fairly close to the patients and be in almost direct contact with them if they are to "catch" the disease.

HOT WEATHER IN THE ARCTIC

Stefansson's Men Suffered Tortures From Heat and the Swarms of Mosquitoes.

"July was intolerably hot. We had no thermometer, but I feel sure," says Stefansson, the explorer, in Harper's Magazine, writing of summer days in the Arctic, "that many a day the temperature must have been over 100 degrees in the sun, and sometimes for weeks on end there was not a cloud in the sky. At midnight the sun was what we would call an hour high, so that it beat down on us without rest twenty-four hours through.

"The hottest period of the day was about 8 o'clock in the evening, and the coolest perhaps 4 or 5 in the morning. The mosquitoes were so bad that several of our dogs were completely blind for the time through the swelling of their eyes, and all of them were lame from running sores caused by the mosquito stings on the line where the hair meets the pad of the foot. It is true that on our entire expedition we had no experience that more nearly deserved the name of suffering than this of the combined heat and mosquitoes of our Coppermine river summer."

Battling With the Fly.

As the warm weather moves up the coast the cities of the south are resuming their battle with the fly. The campaign should be energetically in progress everywhere by the time the hot days are at hand. There is no sense to wait until the Fourth of July, or later, before what is to be done is all carefully arranged and ready for the foe. The southern cities have assumed that they must make their telling blows effective in every way this year. In some cases they are demanding not only the removal of all out-of-door causes of the evil pest, but the screening of buildings entire. This is based on the theory that as it is not yet possible for health officials to invade every indoor place where carelessness permits the propagation of flies, every effort must be made to confine the breeding places so that those who occupy them shall in a measure learn the extent of their folly. In some cities there is talk of ordinances to require the use of screens. The battlecry for 1913 is not "Swat the fly!" but "Starve the fly!"

One Redeeming Feature.

In a small New Jersey town a few miles outside of Philadelphia three traveling men reached the hotel to spend the night. On account of the nearness to the city the hostelry was rather poor.

The trio repaired to the dining room for supper. One ordered eggs, which he could not eat. Another ordered chops, which he was compelled to abandon after vainly trying to secure a bite or two. The third took a chance on beefsteak, which he could not eat on account of its toughness.

Then the travelers began their roasts to the waitress. The man who had ordered beefsteak, however, proved to be an optimist. Reaching for the salt-cellar, with extra large holes in its top, he poured some salt on the tablecloth, with this:

"Gee! this salt's fine, anyhow!"

Faith in Lucky Stones.

Laugh and scoff all you please, you will not be able to lessen one jot the firm belief of thousands that there is such a thing as a lucky stone. A recent pamphlet issued by the vender of such stones declared to have been gathered with many others near Ceylon, India, contains testimonials from men of standing, who seem to be convinced that they have the real luck fascinator with them as constant companion. One enthusiastic stone holder boasts that he has never been without a dollar since he purchased the stone and that he has been offered many and many a job where he could not coax a single offer before the stone reposed in his vest pocket. The dispenser of the stones, for $1 each, does not say why he needs to dispose of them for a livelihood if he carries them himself.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS HELP EDUCATION

Suggestions by Louisville Commercial Club.

BENEFITS OF CO-OPERATION.

Kentucky Sunday School Association Has Done Excellent Work, and Its Influence Can Be Extended Through the Efficient Aid of Public School Teachers and Superintendents.

The educational wave is rising in our old state. For a long time each and every organization that was helping the movemeut has been working independently. Now there is a desire to get together. The following report of a special committee on the work of the Sunday school association and that of the Louisville Commercial club, will explain itself.

The Kentucky Sunday School association has a splendid organization. Every county has some form of organization. Many of the people who are interested in all the best interests of the county are numbered among those who are connected with this association. These persons can be given a broader view of what the Sunday school, the public school and the home could do for the entire community, reaching into the physical, mental, social and spiritual development.

Not only the city pastors, but the rurdl pastors, who are in a measure leaders in the communities, are connected with the Sunday School association, and in many cases the public school teachers, superintendents of the county schools and others engaged in educational work.

The Commercial club is reaching through its wide system of publicity, the prizes it has been offering, and the correspondence conducted, many who are interested in truest education bnt whose viewpoint is different from that of Sunday school workers.

The Kentucky Sunday School association holds conventions in almost every county in the state every year, attended by thousands of the better citizens. In addition to this several hundred district conventions and nearly a thousand rallies and conferences are held. This association also publishes the Kentucky Sunday School Reporter with a circulation of about 5,000 per month.

These two organizations could greatly strengthen and advance the work both are doing by securing one or more persons in each county who would represent both organizations. Under the direction of such persons a survey of many counties might be made, finding the present conditions and forming a common basis for future work. At the conventions held time could be given for the discussion of topics of vital interest for the upbuilding of the community, school, home and Sunday school and the length of the convention be increased to two entire days. The same thing could be done in district convention, rallies and institutes. By holding conferences where a wider range of topics would be presented each would be able to reach many that have not yet become interested. Then each could help the other.

Therefore we suggest:

First.—That in the future on all programs of institutes, conventions and rallies there be given a topic relating to the corelation of secular and religious education in the state along definite lines and that this topic be assigned to a person well informed on both religious and secular education.

In such way there might be the opportunity of bringing to the attention of people who have never thought on the matter the value of such correlation. Because of the wide opportunity which the Sunday school speaker has of reaching audiences in the state this would be the surest way of arousing enthusiasm, disseminating information and removing prejudice.

Second.—That in the future at all electing conventions—district, county and state—there be chosen superintendents who shall promote the co-operation of secular and religious educational forces along definite lines.

Third.—That whenever opportunities arise the possibility of the use of the church as a social center be emphasized and encouraged, making a possible opening for the dissemination of educational ideas.

Fourth.—That at the state convention this work be made a distinct feature of the program and if possible a department session be given it.

The Truant Law.

When this law is so openly set at naught as to bring a particular case to the attention of the public it is time that a halt was called and the malefactor made to suffer for his shortcomings. The sending of a child to school is a moral duty, and when this moral duty is neglected by those whose duty it is to observe it is the duty of the authorities to step in and take a hand. We want to say that if the county superintendent's attention is called to some flagrant violation and she is compelled to act the strong arm of the law will fall in no gentle manner upon the shoulders of the malefactor. Better send the kiddies to school, which is your duty, and where they belong and thereby fulfil your moral obligation as well as avoid a conflict with the school authorities.—Central Record.

FIRST THROUGH the PANAMA CANAL

— By E. V. PICKARD —

Colon, C. Z.—I am going to take you through the completed Panama canal on the first vessel to pass across the isthmus from the Atlantic ocean to the Pacific. True, the canal is not yet completed, and will not be for a year or so, but that shall not prevent our making the trip now, on paper.

Let us imagine ourselves, then, on an ocean liner approaching the Atlantic or northern entrance of the great canal, prepared to enjoy this initial trip and to wonder at the sights in store for us. In that word "northern" lies the first surprise for many of the passengers who did not know that the canal runs not from east to west, but from northwest to southeast. This seeming anomaly is due to the fact that the Isthmus of Panama here trends almost east and west.

It is still early morning when a watchful passenger shouts "Land," and all who are up rush to the port rail to gaze upon the hilly, jungly coast of the isthmus between Porto Bello and Colon. As the steamship plows swiftly through the waters as blue as ever were those of the Mediterranean a cheer goes up from the deck, for we have caught a glimpse of the Stars and Stripes fluttering above a fringe of cocoanut palms. That marks the location of one of the big forts built to protect the canal in time of war and is on Margarita island, virtually a part of the mainland Colon, flat and unpicturesque, now comes into view, and directly ahead of us an immense breakwater stretches a mile out from the shore on the right. At its land end, on Toro point, is another fort whose great guns are masked by the tropical foliage.

Now we have virtually entered the canal, for the 500-foot channel extends far out from the shore line. At reduced speed we enter Colon harbor and the Bay of Limon and steam past the pretentious Washington hotel, Uncle Sam, proprietor; the docks of Colon, crowded with shipping from the United States, Europe and many a port of Latin America, and the American town of Cristobal on whose water front stands the statue of Columbus sent over long years ago by the Empress Eugenie. Skipping about the bay, looking like long, black water beetles, are the cayukas or native dugouts, and moving lazily before the sea breeze are the little sailing craft in which the queer San Blas Indians are bringing their products to market.

Four miles and a half we steam through Limon bay and the shores narrow in on our 500-foot channel, still at tide level. Now look ahead three miles and get a glimpse of the Gatun locks, that tremendous flight of three water steps up which we are to be lifted. In a few minutes we reach the towering dividing wall of concrete, our own power is shut off and the electric locomotives on the lock walls take us in tow. Four of these powerful machines attach their hawsers to our ship, two in front to pull it and two astern to keep it steady and to bring it to a stop when entirely within the lock chamber. The immense gates close silently behind us and at once the water begins to flow into the chamber through culverts that have their openings in the concrete floor. Slowly the vessel rises until it is on a level with the second chamber, 28 1-3 feet above sea level, when the gate ahead is opened and the electric mules move forward, this time up a heavy grade by means of the center racks in the tracks. Twice this operation is repeated, and now we are at the summit, 85 feet above the sea. The last gate opens and the locomotives pull us into Gatun lake.

As our propellers begin to turn again and we steam out into this immense artificial lake, a marvelously beautiful landscape is spread before us. The surface of the lake is dotted with islets, once the summits of Tiger hill, Lion hill and a dozen other eminences; on both sides are steep promontories, lovely little peninsulas and deep bays and inlets where the water has spread into the once jungle-filled valleys.

Before we get too far from the locks, let us step to the starboard rail and have a look at the Gatun dam, enormous stretch of rock, sand and clay that has formed Gatun lake by impounding the waters of the Chagres river. It is in reality a low ridge, one and a half miles long, built across the valley, and when we are told that it is nearly half a mile wide at its base, 400 feet wide at the water surface and 100 feet wide at its crest, which is twenty feet above the level of the lake, how utterly ridiculous seem the fears of those alarmists who predicted the dam would be pushed over by the Chagres in time of flood!

Nearly in the center of the dam we can see the famous spillway through which pass the surplus waters of the Chagres. It is a concrete lined channel 285 feet wide cut through a hill of rock and across it is built a curved dam of concrete on top of which is a row of regulating gates. Just below the spillway, out of our sight, is the hydroelectric station which supplies power for the operation of the entire canal and the lighting of the whole zone.

Our channel through the lake—for we still must follow a path indicated by range towers on the shores—is now a thousand feet wide and leads us somewhat tortuously through a maze of islands. Look down as we near some of them and you will see below the surface the tops of giant trees. For we are sailing over what but a few months ago was the valley of the Chagres, dense with tropic vegetation and dotted with native villages surrounded by banana and cocoanut plantations. Close to the shores the stoutest of the trees still stretch their naked, dead limbs above the water, but before long these, too, will have rotted and fallen, leaving the luxuriant landscape unmarred.

Passing over the sites of Bohio, Frijoles and Chagresito, we now come to the place where Tabernilla once stood, and here both lake and channel narrow down, the latter being first 800, then 700 and finally 500 feet wide. On the hillsides to the right stand a few abandoned houses, all that remains of Mamei, Juan Grande, Gorgona and Matachin, busy places while the canal was building, now covered by the spreading waters. Along the left shore of the channel runs the relocated Panama railway and here at Gamboa it crosses the Chagres river, which our vessel now leaves to enter the far famed Culebra cut. This great gash through the spine of the continent is 300 feet wide at the bottom, but, because of the tremendous earth slides which cost Uncle Sam so much money and time, its width at the top is astonishing, being half a mile just here opposite the town of Culebra. Beyond, on our left, towers Gold hill, 495 feet above the bottom of the canal. Far up on its rocky slope we discern a streak of white paint which marks the level to which the French company carried its excavations. Nearly opposite is Contractor's hill, 364 feet high. As we move between these, the loftiest hills along the route, and pass the location of that notorious "cockroach," the Cucaracha slide, the Pedro Miguel lock stands before us, white in the noonday sun. This, a single flight lock, is 30 feet high, the highest on the canal. Again we are taken in tow by electric mules and in less than half an hour we have been lowered those 30 feet and steam into another artificial body of water, Miraflores lake, only a mile long. At its southern end we pass the town of Miraflores and enter the locks of the same name, a double flight that lets us down once more to sea level.

The exciting part of the passage is over, but there is yet much of interest to see. Down the broad channel we look clear out onto the glittering waters of the Pacific ocean. Nearer at hand, on the left, Ancon hill raises its verdure-clad summit, and clustered on its slopes we see the many structures of the big hospital, the new administration buildings of the canal and the barracks of the marines. And now, steaming between filled-in swamp lands, we come to Balboa, which the government has made into a fine naval station, with an immense dry dock and extensive machine shops.

Stretching out from Balboa into the Pacific is a breakwater, two miles long, which protects the harbor from storms. At its outer end is a cluster of little islands, Naos, Perico, Culebra and Flamenco, and here we pass under the powerful guns that guard the Pacific end of the canal. They are mounted high up on the summits of these rock islets, rifled cannon, one shot from which would sink a battleship, and huge mortars whose shells can be dropped behind Tobago island 12 miles away in the direction of Japan.

In ten hours we have crossed through the continent and now float on the broad Pacific. As we look back the picturesque city of Panama lies bathed in the light of the westering sun and on the side of Ancon hill shines the big white Tivoli hotel. The sudden night of the tropics is soon to fall, and already, as far back as we can see along our route and beside the ocean channel, are twinkling the lights that Uncle Sam has set up to guide the world's commerce through this most wonderful of canals which he has built.

FEEDING AND CARE OF GEESE

One of the Cheapest and Easiest of All Domestic Fowls to Raise—Method of Management.

Geese are one of the cheapest and easiest of all domestic fowls to raise, says the Farm and Fireside. They require little shelter at any time, and if given plenty of pasture, will gather the largest portion of their food from the fields. They are very easily and quickly fattened for market and bring very good prices. This is the method for managing breeding and market geese: Never mate over two females to each gander. Never use females less than two or ganders over four years of age. They are allowed to run in a pasture where they have plenty of grass to eat and water to swim in. In winter and during the laying season feed them lightly the following ration: Bran, four parts; shorts, two parts; cornmeal, one part; and in winter cut clover, steamed, four parts, is added. A goose will lay 30 to 40 eggs in a season, if she is allowed to sit. The eggs require 30 days for incubation, and invariably hatch well.

Goslings are removed from the incubators as soon as dry, and placed in brooders where the heat for the first 24 hours is 90 degrees. After the first 24 hours the heat is reduced daily until the goslings are ten to fifteen days old. Beginning the third morning after hatching the goslings are fed as follows, four times daily, by measure: Bran, one part; rolled oats, one part; cornmeal shorts, one part. This mixture is dampened with skim milk until it will crumble. Grass, grit, and drinking water are always before them.

Water is given in fountains, so they cannot get into it. They are fed as mentioned until they are eight weeks old, when those for market are closely confined to be fattened, and fed as follows, three times daily, all they will eat: Bran, two parts; shorts, one part; oil meal and beef scraps, one part; cornmeal, one part, dampened until it will crumble. Whole corn is frequently given. Green food, grit and water are always before them.

FEEDING SILAGE IN SUMMER

Missouri Expert Says It Is Cheaper Than Blue Grass Pasture—Formation of Good Dairy Cow.

Dean Mumford of the Missouri college of agriculture makes the statement that cows can be maintained more cheaply on silage than they can be carried through the summer on blue-grass pasture where the land costs about $100 per acre and is suitable for growing corn.

He says that there is very little pasture land where a cow and a calf can be pastured on less than one and one-half acres, but it is entirely possible to get twelve and one-half to twenty tons of silage from one acre. A cow and her calf can be carried through the summer on two pounds of clover hay and thirty-five pounds of silage per day as well or better than on blue-grass pasture. Thus he declares that you can carry a cow and her calf six months on less than a half-acre of silage.

Princess Salatine Carlotta, Owned by University of Missouri, Produced 18,405 Pounds of Milk and 721 Pounds of Butter in One Year.

The good dairy cow has a broad forehead, indicating intelligence and a kindly disposition. She has a short thin neck not at all beefy, in which veins are plainly manifest. She is narrow through the front shoulders and thick chested, indicating good lung capacity.

She has a large, well rounded stomach, showing capacity for storage of food and water, from which milk is to be manufactured. She has broad hips and a good width through the flanks, giving plenty of room of lacteal organs. There is also a gentle incline from her shoulders to her rump. The udder is large and soft, hanging down well between her hind legs and extending forward and backward in a well balanced proportion. Her legs are short and her hair is a glossy color.

Egg-Eating Habit.

Egg-eating is a habit that starts with hens, generally, that are out of condition, or in other words, when the hen gets too fat and also when there is a scarcity of lime in the bill of fare the shells of the eggs become thin. When being laid these soft-shelled eggs usually break and the hen thus acquires a taste. It is always best to gather the eggs several times a day so that there will be no chance for breakage by hens crowding on the nest or by a newly laid egg striking those already laid.

Removing Old Knives.

To get the old knives off a sickle, just hold the sickle strip on an anvil, or whatever you use for an anvil, letting the knife stand over the edge, and one or two blows above the rivets will take the old knife off. In other words, let the old knife be its own chisel to cut the rivets off.

"Pittsburgh Perfect" Fence

LOWEST IN COST Because HIGHEST IN QUALITY

Don't forget, when you buy fence, that price is not cost. Price is only what you pay when you buy. Cost is all you have had to pay up to the time you must replace the old fence with new.

The low cost to you of "Pittsburgh Perfect" Fence is because it is made of special Open Hearth wire, electrically welded at every joint, which gives it greatest strength and longest life, and reduces maintenance cost to the lowest figure.

In "Pittsburgh Perfect" you get more quality and genuine fence service for less money than any other fence affords. That's the point to remember.

Made in Different Styles for FIELD, FARM, RANCH, LAWN, CHICKEN, POULTRY and RABBIT YARD and GARDEN

Every Rod Guaranteed

Ask your dealer for "Pittsburgh Perfect" and insist on his furnishing it. Do not allow him to persuade you that some other fence is just as good. If he doesn't sell it, write us direct.

CLIFFORD LAWS,
tf. Walton, Ky.

The Fourth passed off very quietly here. Some few spent the day in Cincinnati, a few city folks visited here, and business was generally suspended in observation of the holiday.

Miss Maggie Johnson was tendered a delightful surprise party at the home of her parents Rev. and Mrs. A. K. Johnson Saturday night. Twelve couples were present. A pleasant evening was enjoyed by all. Nice refreshments were served during the evening.

The ladies of the Baptist church will give a, lawn fete Saturday evening, July 12th, on the premises of Judge Crowe. Nice refreshments of ice cream, cake, etc., will be served. The proceeds are for the building fund of the new church which they will soon start building.

Hons. Fred Stucy, of Ghent, Carroll county, and M. H. Bourne, of Owenton, Owen county, passed through here Monday enroute to Burlington, to attend a meeting of the Boone County Burley Tobacco Society. Both gentlemen are members of the State board of the Burley Tobacco Society, Mr. Stucy being a member from the Sixth District and Mr. Bourne from the Seventh District. Both of these gentlemen are hard working earnest members of the State board and are deserving of a great deal of praise for their untiring efforts in behalf of the society.

The Burlington base ball club passed thru here on the Fourth enroute to Lakeland where they played the ball team at that place. The score was 10 to 11 in favor of Lakeland. The Burlington boys intimated that they did not get a square deal in the decisions of the umpire. The Burlington club will play a return game with Lakeland in September.

An open session of Walton Lodge, Knights of Pythias, was held last Thursday night. Addresses were given by D. B. Wallace and John J. Howe, which was enjoyed by those present. Quite a number of ladies were present. At the conclusion of the speeches refreshments of ice cream and cake were served. The affair in its entirety was greatly enjoyed by those present.

The sale of the lands belonging to the estate of the late Mrs. Joseph Glinn, ordered sold by decree of the Boone Circuit Court in order to settle said estate among the heirs the Master Commissioner Chas. Maurer sold the different parcels of land at Burlington last Monday, the following being the purchasers: S. C. Hicks 25 and a fraction acres on Needmore street, Walton, for $2,600. W. B. Johnson and D. B. Wallace, 51 acres of land on High street, Walton, for $1,800. The purchasers anticipate improving their properties in the fall, by the erection of buildings altho it is all farm land.

At the annual meeting of the stockholders of the Walton Perpetual Building and Loan Association held July 2d, the following officers were elected for the ensuing term: G. W. Ransler, president; C. Scott Chambers, vice president; S. L. Edwards, secretary; R. C. Green, treasurer; J. L. Vest Attorney. Directors—Dr. D. M. Bagby, T. F. Curley, H. C. Diers, A. M. Edwards, J. D. Mayhugh, Dr A. N. Jones, J. E. Bristow. Appraising Committee—T. F. Curley, A. M. Edwards, J. E. Bristow. Finance Committee—J. D. Mayhugh, Dr. A. N. Jones, H. C. Diers. A semi-annual dividend of three and one-half per cent. was declared. The association is in a very prosperous condition and has been very ably managed by its executive officers.

Chas. J. Bagby, 73, an old and highly respected citizen of Fiskburg, Kenton county, died suddenly at his late home Tuesday, July 8th, after a short illness from asthma. Mr. Bagby was married twice and was the father of sixteen children. In 1863 he was married to Miss Louisa Loomis. To this union ten children were born. His first wife died in 1883. In 1884 he married Miss Nannie Youtsey, of Cold Springs, Campbell county, to which union six children were born. Mr. Bagby was born at Key West, Kenton county, Feb. 20th, 1840. When a young man he entered the ministry of the Baptist church and remained in church service until late in life, when he retired to the farm and took up agricultural pursuits. The funeral took place Thursday at 2 p. m., from the Fiskburg Baptist church, after which the remains were laid to rest in the church cemetery.

There was 'something doing' here last Saturday when a Court of Inquiry met at the opera house with the following town officials in attendance: Police Judge T. J. Crowe, Town Atty., Jno. L. Vest, Mayor H. C. Diers, Town Marshal, Bruce Dudgeon. Also Revs. H. C. Wayman A. K. Johnson, R. B. Baird and the members of the ladies' religious and temperance societies. The object of the court was to try to find out if whisky or other intoxicants were being sold here by bootleggers or blind tigers. About forty-two witnesses were summoned. Court convened at 10:00 o'clock a. m., and witnesses were grilled from that hour until 6 p. m., in an effort to obtain information that would lead to the arrest or indictment of those who might be guilty. There was no tangible evidence adduced that would inculpate anyone, but considerable feeling was manifested by some of those summoned and those prosecuting the inquiry. However, up to the close of the Court of Inquiry no tangible evidence was obtained to render an indictment. Court was then adjourned until two weeks hence July 21st when court will then convene to prosecute further inquiry.

Dine's Special Unifold Bed Offer

a Positive $40.00 Value

THE DESIGN

It's surely a beauty in every respect. It is a design that was especially chosen, for it will suit the most exacting persons. The frame is perfectly plain, along Colonial lines, and will match perfectly with any style pieces that are in the room in which you may place it.

The style of upholstering is also plain, but can be furnished in plain seat and tufted back, or tufted all over. We recommend the plain style of upholstering, as it is the neatest and the easiest to keep clean.

THE MATERIALS

The very finest of materials have been used in the making of this bed; every part carefully selected and guaranteed to give wear. The frames are of beautifully figured quartered oak, hand rubbed and polished; furnished in either golden oak, Early English or fumed finishes. The covering is the very best obtainable, and is warranted against peeling or cracking.

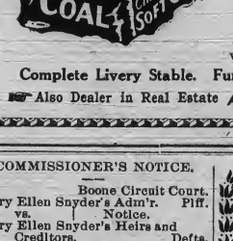
THE CONSTRUCTION

Every part of this Unifold Bed is made in the best possible manner and will give a lifetime of service. The arms are rigid, as they are securely fastened in the back and can, with the least difficulty, be taken apart for moving or cleaning.

THE PRICE

Through a recent deal with a Cincinnati factory, we arranged to take the balance of their stock of this particular style bed, and we bought them at a price cheaper than the cost of manufacturing. You can judge for yourself at what a very low price we bought them if you can consider how very reasonable $29.75 is for this wonderful bed. It should actually retail at $40, a positive saving of $10.25.

WHY YOU NEED THIS UNIFOLD BED



Besidef the strikiyg appearance of this unifold bed, which will add greatly to the furnishings of the room, it serves you a double purpose. By day, a most beautiful davenport, which con be placed in the most elegantly-furnished room, and by night be converted into a sanitary, comfortable bed for two persons. It solves the extra-room problem, for you can have this as a spare bed in your parlor without spoiling the looks (in fact, it adds to its appearance), thus saving the cost of an extra bed-room.

WE WANT YOU TO SEE THIS FURNITURE MASTERPIECE

You can best appreciate this value by seeing it, so if you have been contemplating buying one one and hesitated on account of the high cost of a good one, be sure and call early, as our present supply will not last long at this remarkable low price.

Thos. Brown and family and Hugh Smith, of Cincinnati, were guests of relatives, here Saturday night and Sunday.

W. L. Conner was born Jan. 1st, 1846, died Thursday, July 10, 1913 at 8:30 p. m., aged 67 years. He was married to Laura M. Hedges, and to them were born seven children, one of whom died in infancy, one son Hubert, and five daughters, Mrs. Robt. Aylor, Mrs. Smith Goodridge, Mrs. Ed, Ernst, Mrs. Olive Goodridge and Mrs. Emmit Kilgour, still survive. There are twelve grandchildren. He had long been a member of the Hebron Lutheran church. Mr. Conner was a splendid neighbor and will be greatly missed in this neighborhood. The funeral services took place at the Hebron church, Saturday at 2 p. m., in the presence of a large number of sorrowing relatives and friends. Rev. Wallace conducted the services. The remains were laid to rest in the cemetery here. The family have the sympathy of all in their sad bereavement.

John Ernst was born in Enochsburg, Decator county, Ind. He was a sufferer of several months of liver trouble, died July 4th. He came to Kentucky and located in Hebron in the month of Dec. 1877. He has served the people faithfully for 36 years. He was known as one of the finest mechanics. He was kind hearted, always ready, and did his part in any and everything he was asked to. He leaves a wife and two children, Edward Ernst and Mayme Ellis, to mourn his death, one daughter preceded him to the grave four years ago the 20th day of June 1909.

The family wishes t oexpress their heartfelt thanks for the kindness shown them in the loss of husband and father from their friends and relatives, to Rev. Father O'Dwyer for his kind services during his illness and death; to Dr. F. L. Sayre for his faithful and untiring visits and W. Bullock for the efficient manner in which the funeral was conducted. Chas. and Harry Wilhoit, of Covington, are enjoying their vacation with Mr. and Mrs. Fred Utz.

Protracted meeting will be held at the Baptist church by Rev. Brown beginning the 4th Sunday in this month.

Julius Corbin, who is employed by C. W. Myers, fell and hurt himself very badly last week, and has been unable to be at the store for several days.

Andy Fouse, who moved here from the city not long since and kept up such a commotion by quarreling and fighting was put to flight by some unknown persons stoning the house where he lived and breaking his furniture. Florence may have the name of experiencing more sensational happenings than any other town on the globe, but we would rather do without those things that create as much excitement as the blowing up of the main.

PT. PLEASANT.

Wm. Tupman and Miss Beulah Tanner spent the 4th at Chesten park.

Benj. Micheals and family made a tour in his new auto last Sunday evening.

Ira Walton and wife and P. J. Allen and wife visited the Lagoon, last Sunday.

People from the city are scouring the country in search of black berries which are poor on account of the dry weather.

The M. W. A. Lodge at Grange Hall will confer the second degree of Woodcraft this, Thursday night. The camp is in a thrifty condition and is the banner camp of the county.

Mr. and Mrs. N. L. Moore celebrated Mrs. Moore's anniversary last Sunday with a big dinner and a home coming to all their children and grandchildren which was quite a pleasant occasion to the old people. Several other guests were present, 49 in all and each one enjoyed the day.

Farmers Need Aid In Raising Dark Tobacco.

Washington, D. C., July 11.—Samuel V. Dixon, Commonwealth's Attorney of Henderson county, Ky., yesterday appeared before the joint Congressional committee which is investigating tobacco conditions here and abroad. He charged there was a combination between European buyers cooperating with an American organization to grab the earnings of the growers of dark tobacco in Western Kentucky and insisted that the aid of the Government was necessary in order that the farmers might fight these monopolistic buying conditions.

He outlined the history of the Stemming District Tobacco Association in Western Kentucky in 1906 and said it was started not to cause plunder, but to fight monopoly.

As a remedy for conditions, he suggested that the Government tax every pound of tobacco that goes into the market some 15 cents a pound, the tax to be paid by the buyers and held in trust for the farmers by the Government after the expenses of the Government have been deducted. The trust fund could eventually be used to stimulate the tobacco industry. The consumer, of course would ultimately pay the tax, which would be a tax on a luxury, anyhow.

On another page in this issue appears the statement of the Burley Tobacco Society to the pooleers and the stockholders. In next week's Recorder will appear an answer to it prepared by the attorneys J. L. Vest Wm. A. Byrne and J. G. Tomlin, who represent the stockholders. The copy for the article reached this office too late to be handled this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Newton Sullivan, Jr., were given a house warming last Monday night which was productive of a large number of useful presents. Friends to the number of about fifty took part in the affair and when they began to depart for home Mr. Sullivan thanked them for their presents in a well timed but brief speech.

Lost—Two black bull calves with spots on them, also one yellow heifer calf. Each about three months old. Been gone about two weeks. Information as to them will be gladly received by B. E. Aylor, Burlington R. D. 1.

CALIFORNIA LPTTER.

Long Beach, Cala., July 1, 1913.

To the Recorder:

I think several of the Recorder's readers know by reputation, Dr. J. W. Whitcomb Brougher, who, no doubt, is the most talked of minister in Los Angeles county, and it might be interesting to any one active in church work to know something of this energetic, enthusiastic Baptist preacher, and also his church setting which is very out of the ordinary.

The Temple Baptist church is an immense building, built and fitted up exactly like a theater for which it is used during the week.

It has a very fine pipe organ, all of which is hidden from view except the key board. By the time the organist begins the musical part of the services at 7:30 the main building, galleries and box seats are filled. One must go early to get a seat for it is no uncommon thing to have to turn people from services at Temple church.

The heavy stage curtain is down while he plays and sometimes accompanied by the organ are the chimes behind the curtain.

Then it is rolled up and there is the chorus of one hundred or more singers, garbed each alike in long, flowing white robes.

Sunday evening he had baptismal services, when two young ladies and a man were baptised. It was next thing to being at a river baptismal scene which is hard to reproduce in a city, but they have a beautiful arrangement there. The stage scene at the back was the sky and clouds and on each side the stage wings showing trees and foliage. On each side of the pool which crossed the stage, showed grass and flowers.

The young ladies were met and wrapped by another lady and it was hard to realize that it was taking place on a platform. It seemed more like a shady pool in a creek.

Dr. Brougher is a power in Southern California. People crowd to hear him wherever he is expected.

While he has a splendid corps of singers and everything beautiful around him, he is the central figure.

Some people claim that he is sensational. He uses many illustrations but he preaches right to the point in a great city where vice is a common thing.

His sensational part may be in his advertising. He and his church are before the people all the time but that is necessary here. There are so many places of amusement calling the attention of the people and then so many tourists; but advertising is an essential in everything. As a gentleman said at a banquet of California boosting: "Advertising is necessary. The hen lays an egg and advertises the fact. A duck lays one and keeps still about it. The hen's egg is in demand and far outreaches the duck egg."

Dr. Brougher's subject was "Ghosts—Do they make tables walk and talk?" He condemned spiritualists in scathing terms.

One of the hardest things here is to cope with the many cults and religions.

Here in long Beach when they took the religious census last year there were sixty-six different religions, an increase of 17 over the year before.

Down on "The Pike" on Sunday may be seen half a dozen gatherings of people listening to some man or sometimes woman expound the religious belief in which that particular gathering indulge. We have a Spiritualist Temple harboring socialists, new thought followers and various other superstitions.

Taking his text from Samuel 25:7, Dr. Brougher didn't hesitate to give voice to his views to his great congregation.

His services are very beautiful and impressive. He preaches from simple themes, selects old time songs and is one of the leaders in the ranks for good.

Yours Truly,
LUCY RUSSELL.

Address 1015 E. 5th Street.

James L. Riley and wife, of Ludlow, were guests of Rev. and Mrs. Edgar Riley, last Monday night and Tuesday.

Wanted—Roan Shorthorn bull calf. If you have one for sale address Clinton Blankenbeker, at Florence, Ky.

R. A. Steel, of Rising Sun, has charge of Wm. Pope's funeral last Saturday. Mr. Steel has interred close to 4,000 bodies.

A. B. Rouse has had a handsome monument erected at the grave of his father in the Odd-Fellows' cemetery. The Lawrenceburg Marble and Granite Works put it up.

STRAYED—From my pasture, one yearling and one aged Hampshire ram. Any information concerning them will be thankfully received by B. T. Kelly, Burlington, R. D. 2.

There will be another picnic at Harvest Home grounds on the afternoon of the 26th inst., at which time the refreshment privileges for the approaching Harvest Home will be rented to the highest bidder.

...y On the Editors.

...Democratic editors are ... receiving scant recognition at the hands of the National administration. They are the men who do the work in campaigns and they are in position to assert their claim to a part of the work in the election. So far we do not recall the appointment of a single one to office—not even a postoffice. We know what it means to conduct a country newspaper in Kentucky and would be glad to see some of our brethren on the other side come into their own.—Hartford Republican.

In the main our neighbor is right. Mr. J. M. Richardson of the Glasgow Times is the only editor we recall who has landed at the pie counter. Desha Breckinridge of the Lexington Herald, S. W. Hager, of the Owensboro Inquirer, Editor Cooper, of the Clipper, and Henry Summers, of the Smith's Grove Times have been among the editors who have been turned down. There are a number of others who at the right time will "get the ax," and probably a few of them will land. It is very surprising how much the politicians love the editor when they want something from the dear people, and how they seem to entirely forget him when they have gotten what they want. The newspapers do entirely too much for the politicians and the politicians do too little for the editors. The editors can get along much better without the politicians than the politicians can without the editors and it is time in Kentucky that the editors should assert themselves and when politicians want to advertise themselves make them pay for it like merchants and the rest of folks who buy space at so much a line or so much an inch.—Elizabethtown News.

The notion seems to have gotten into the craniums of many editors that editors ought to be given any office for which they ask when their party is in power. Why editors should be a preferred class when it comes to the distribution of political pie, either State or Federal, the Recorder is too dull of comprehension to understand. An editor, be he a Democrat, Republican or Bull Moose, depends upon the members of his party for support, and, of course, his efforts in behalf of his party entitles him to it, but, all other things being equal, why should the appointing power go over the heads of the boys in the trenches and call into service a larger per cent of editors than of anyother vocation? If politicians impose upon the editors it is the editors' fault, and an editor is not entitled to especial favors because he has whooped it up for a politician, and basing a claim for an appointment on such grounds is ridiculous in the extreme. The Recorder has found, as a class, politicians with whom it has had dealings, ready and willing to pay liberally for services it has rendered them, and it believes that the editor who uses the columns of his paper to boost politicians, looking for compensation to come in the appointment to a state or Federal office, ought to get it in the neck.

Give Dad A Chance.

What is Home without a Mother, and God Bless Our Home.

We often see these mottoes hanging in homes and we love to read them, but the Father is not mentioned.

So. Dad, here's one to you:

Dad, he gets up every morning early, lights the fire, boils an egg, and wipes off the dew of the dawn with his boots, while many a mother is sleeping, he makes the weekly handout for the butcher, the grocer, the milk man and baker, and his purse badly worn before he has been home an hour.

If there is a noise during the night, dad is kicked in the back and made to go down stairs to find the burglar and kill him off. Mother darns the socks, but dad bought them in the first place, and the needles and the yarn afterwards.

Mother put up the fruit; well, dad bought it all, and jars and sugar cost like the dickens. Dad buys the chickens for the Sunday dinner, carves them himself and draws the neck when ruins after everyone else is served.

What is home without a mother? Yes, that is all right; but what is home without a Father? Ten chances to one its a boarding house. Father is under a slab and the landlady is the widow. Dad, here's to you, you've got your faults, you may have lots of them, but you're all right, and we'll miss you when you're gone. M. S. Rice.

A Great Clover Year.

We have not seen such a good clover year as this is for a long time. Along the roadsides, on lawns, city lots, in pastures and meadows, all the clovers are doing their best, except in many fields, especially seeded to clover, and there the failure is pronounced. Red clover, alsike, lespedeze, and white clover are in evidence as never before for years, the growth is good and blossoms rich. If there were any bees in this part of the country it would be a great honey year. We do not know why our farmers will not keep bees; probably, like children, they are too much trouble. But the clover blossoms are here in abundance, and the sweet clover, the weed that grows in such luxuriance along the roadside, is rich in bloom and honey. Nature is ever ready to do her part, but man, the greedy destroyer, is too negligent to make use of many of her blessings.—Our Country.

Raise Calves On Skimmed Milk.

Calves raised upon skimmed milk can develop into first class dairy cows. On hundreds of farms skimmed milk constitutes the main portion of the feed of the young calf and such calves make as good cows as those receiving whole milk.

It costs a great deal less to raise a calf on skimmed milk than on whole milk. By this plan the cream can be sold and made into butter and the proceeds added to the farm income.

Calves do well on skimmed milk whether skimmed by hand or with a cream separator, but skimmed milk from the separator has the advantage of being fresh and warm and sweet when fed. Where as many as three or four cows are milked regularly, a separator will prove a paying proposition. It saves a great deal of time and labor in setting the milk away for the cream to rise and in cleaning milk vessels.

Feeding skimmed milk develops a large stomach in the calf. This is exceedingly desirable because, after a big udder, the most valuable point in a cow is a large capacious paunch in which she may store her feed. Every great milk cow without exception has a large barrel.

The calf may be allowed to remain with its mother for five or six days, at which time the milk is usually fit to be saved. It should then be taken away from the cow and if possible out of her sight and hearing.

During the first week after removal from its mother, it should receive about nine pounds of milk a day, divided into two or three feeds, preferably into three. After this, skimmed milk should begin gradually to replace the whole milk so that by the time the calf is three weeks old it is getting skimmed milk only, the quantity varying from 12 to 18 pounds a day according to the size and thriftness of the calf. A teaspoonful of blood flour added to each feed of skimmed milk adds to its feeding value and prevents scours. The skimmed milk should always be fed warm, 98 to 100 degrees or blood heat being about right.

The bucket from which the calf is fed should be washed and scalded after each feeding. The use of filthy slop buckets and unclean and sour milk will surely result in unthrifty calves and in a great deal of trouble with scours.

Within three or four weeks the calf will begin to eat bran and shelled corn, and will nibble at hay. A small amount of these materials should therefore be provided. Good clean clover or alfalfa hay gives the best results. Care should be taken not to give too much grain. A safe rule is to give a little less than the calf will clean up.

At the age of ten to twelve weeks if a good pasture is available, the calf will be able to get a living from grass. When this is the case the skimmed milk may be withdrawn. Care should be taken at this time to avoid stunting the calf and enough grain should be given to keep it in a thrifty growing condition, but not fat.

Teaching the calf to drink out of a bucket requires a little patience. Gently back the calf into a corner of the stall, stand astride the youngster, wet the fingers in the milk and let the calf get a taste of the milk. Then gently lower the head into the pail, the calf meanwhile sucking the fingers. Allow it to continue sucking the hand and it will meanwhile be sucking or drinking the milk. Then gently remove the hand and the calf will continue to drink the milk. Sometimes it is necessary to allow the calf to go 24 hours without food before it will allow itself to be fed from the bucket.

Teaching the calf to eat grain may be accomplished by daubing a little bran on the nose after it has finished drinking its milk. In licking this off it will learn to eat the feed, a small quantity of which should be placed before it. It will learn to eat hay without any special encouragement.

A Bumper Wheat Harvest.

From reports issued by the Department of Agriculture it is expected that the wheat crop this year will be in the neighborhood of 741,000,000 bushels, a real bumper harvest. But great as the crop appears to be, it has not kept pace with the population. The farm product of the United States does not match in growth the number of persons to be fed. This, in fact, is the great secret in the high cost of all food supplies in America, because quantity does not increase nearly so fast as population. The value of farm products grows greater each year. Last year it was more than $9,000,000,000. But this was due more to the extremely high price for produce than to the great quantity produced. Every year the American people eat a larger proportion of all the things this country grows, and have a smaller proportion to export. At the present rate of this tendency it will not be long before cotton will be the important agricultural article which the United States will have to sell to the Old World. We will need the product of our farms to feed the workingman. It will be his product that must be peddled before the nations of the globe. In the meantime we must cater to the producer of our food.

SPECIAL NOTICE

To My Friends and Patrons and The Public at Large.

I have perfected a system for repairing Buggies and Vehicles of all kinds whereby the work is better than ever, wearing longer, holding the luster just twice as long as the usual way of repairing. Another great advantage whereby it is far ahead of the old way is that I use no water on any part of the body or gear until the job is in the last coat of rubbing varnish, and by that time I have all parts of the body well protected, where in doing work the old way we rub with a rubbing stone out of water, called Filler, thereby letting the water get between the pannel of the body and the sill, loosening the plugs, rusting the screws and causing plugs to come out. That is why your pannels break in corners and come loose—water gets in and destroys the glue, letting the water stand there by rotting the wood.

Recollect I have been in the Carriage Business for 35 years, and have made it a life study. I have been working on my Dry System for the last four years and now have it perfected. While there is more work attached to my system and material is more in cost, my price for a Buggy still remains the same—$18.00 for a first-class job of painting and guaranteed to be such. If you want something cheaper in painting I will do it for you but at you risk.

Kelly Rubber Tires.

I have just boughta full supply of the Kelly Springfield Rubber Tires and am prepared to supply your wants at a moment's notice. I have 3,000 pounds now ready to put on while you wait for them at prices to suit everybody that wants a high-grade tire for just the same money they pay other people for a cheap grade. Of course you know I am prepared to do anything for you in the carriage maker's line. Come and see me and get prices and I'll assure you you will go home convinced you have been treated alright.

N. B.—I guarantee the Kelly Tire to be first quality—not second or third grade, and wear twice as long as anyother make of tire.

Yours respectfully,
H. G. COLLINS, Erlanger, Ky.

The Split Log Drag.

Circuit Judge J. F. Gordon, of Madisonville, talked entertainingly of the King split log drag to a crowd that filled the court house, at Marion, Crittenden county. He told of what had been done in Hopkins county. He said Mr. King visited that county about a year ago and gave a demonstration of the split log drag. The people then took hold where he left off and there are more than 300 miles of roads that are as smooth as floors and which remain in good condition in bad weather.

Judge Gordon was very enthusiastic in his description of the roads resulting from the King method. He told of a road out at his own farm, a road he has been dragging for a considerable period. It seems that Judge Gordon himself made a King drag about seven years ago and used it on his road with success. But he could not get the neighborhood to adopt the practice UNTIL AFTER the King meeting, at which the Hopkins County Good Roads Association was organized. Judge Gordon said his road stays good all the time and costs nothing but a little work at the right time.

"You've got a lot to learn," exclaimed Judge Gordon, "when you undertake to use a split log drag."

The highways of Hopkins county are divided into short sections and a farmer placed in charge of each section. These sections are from two to four miles in length and will be shortened as rapidly as possible, because the authorities agreed with Mr. King in saving that a mile of road is enough for one drag. Judge Gordon told of a meeting in one of the magisterial districts. The log drag was up for discussion; some praised it and some found fault with it. But the discussion stopped when Mr. Hunter, a saw mill owner, stated that he owned seven saw mills and that all but one of them had been compelled to shut down on account of bad roads. That the one which had continued in operation all winter was on the Earlington and St. Charles road, which had been dragged and which he had been able to log without interruption. Mr. Hunter said he could haul 1,000 feet of lumber with one yoke of oxen over the St. Charles road, with same load would put the wheels in mud up to the hub on the other roads. The testimony closed the controversy.

Kentcky Mules in Demand.

Kentucky mules are in large demand and prices are very attractive. Numerous sales of work mules have been made recently at prices varying from $325 $550 per pair. The State is also upholding its fame for fine jacks and jennets. Buyers in great numbers have come here to make purchases of breeding stock to be used to improve the work stock in other States. A yearling jack raised in Montgomery county was recently sold for $800. Henry Letton, of Nicholas county, sold a fine suckling mare mule for $150.

During the summer months mothers of young children should watch for any unnatural looseness of the bowels. When given prompt attention at this time serious trouble may be avoided. Here's The Plumb Bob

It's just another proof that Tubular Cream Separators are just up to the minute—miles ahead of anyother. No other machine has it.

What's It For?

It enables you to level the Sharples Dairy Tubular Cream Separator in a minute—quicker than you could find the spirit level you must use to level all other separators. A glance at the plumb bob, hanging there on the back of the Tubular, will always tell you whether the Tubular remains level. In that way you get the very best work out of the Tubular, for all Separators should be kept level to do their best work.

Tubulars have dozens of exclusive fine points and are sold on the level. Bring the wife in. See how simple, perfect and different from others Tubulars are.

This report was unanimously approved by the District Board and ordered to be printed.

In addition to this financial statement, the Board desires to submit to the members of the 1909 pool and to the public a plain statement of facts. The foregoing financial statement shows a balance of $300,746.49 arising from the sale of the 1907 pooled tobacco which has not been distributed.

Before the 1907 pooled tobacco was paid for, suits were brought by the independent tobacco manufacturers in the Federal Courts at Cincinnati, Covington and Frankfort, seeking to hold the Burley Tobacco Society and the whole pool movement to be in violation of the Sherman Anti-Truet law and also seeking to recover damages against the Society and the members of the District Board and other prominent growers to the amount of about $1,000,000.00.

The suit in Cincinnati was in the name of the E. O. Eshelby Tobacco Company and was the only one that came to a final trial, which was in the early party of the year 1912. This was won by the Society. One of the other suits was settled shortly after this. The two remaining suits, involving about $400,000.00, were not settled until about the first of May, 1913.

During the pendency of these suits, no distribution of this balance of the 1907 money could be made. Before the settlement of these suits the Auditor's Agent of Kentucky filed suits in about forty different counties for back taxes against the Society, covering the 1906, 1907 and 1909 pools, seeking an assessment against the Society covering the years 1907 to 1913, the aggregate assessment claimed in these suits amounting to $62,000,000 in round numbers, the taxes sought to be collected amounting in round numbers to $630,000 with 20 per cent penalty to be added. These tax suits were pending when the suits in the Federal Courts were settled and are still pending and until they are determined no distribution of this balance of the 1907 pool can be made.

About May 1, 1913, however, when the Federal suits were settled, the Board directed distribution sheets to be prepared and they were prepared to enable the Society to distribute this balance of the 1907 pool money as soon as these suits brought by the Auditor's Agent can be disposed of. Nothing remains to be done by the Society in reference to the distribution of this balance except to write out the checks when this litigation is determined.

Stock To Be Issued.

The certificates for the capital stock in the Burley Tobacco Company are in the hands of the printer and will be issued to the members of the 1909 pool or the holders of the warehouse receipts as soon as the warehouse receipts are turned in to the Company. The holders of the warehouse receipts should turn them in to the County Chairman or Secretary to be forwarded to the Burley Tobacco Company at its office in Lexington, Ky., as soon as possible so that the certificate of stock can be issued to the owners.

The Company could not issue these certificates of stock before this time for the reason that the amount to be issued to each member could not be ascertained until the tobacco was sold. The final sales were not completed until July 4, 1912. A man who buys tobacco on the hogshead market is allowed six months to make reclamation for damages arising from the tobacco in the hogshead not being as good as the sample. The time would not run out for these reclamations until January 4, 1913, and until that time it could not be determined what amount of stock should be issued to each holder. However, in the month of August, 1912, bids for the printing of this stock were secured from the printers and the form of the stock certificate was directed to be prepared by the attorneys of the Company. In the first part of October, 1912, suit was filed by two men owning $175 worth of stock, in the Kenton Circuit Court against the Burley Tobacco Company, attacking the charter of the Company and the right to issue the form of stock certificate which the charter required to be issued. That suit was brought to a final determination in the lower court as soon as could be done and was then taken to the Court of Appeals and advanced and submitted at the earliest possible moment and was not finally decided by that Court until the 17th day of June, 1913. The Court of Appeals in its decision held that the provisions in the charter of the Company relating to the form of the stock certificate and the voting of the stock were void and that the stock would have to be issued with the voting power accompanying it directly to the owner of the stock. Immediately upon the rendering of this decision the Company proceeded to have the stock certificates prepared and they will be promptly issued.

Protected the Control.

It was the purpose in the organization of this Company to keep the management and control beyond the reach of the enemies of the growers, and the charter of this Company provided that the individuals constituting from time to time the members of the District Board of the Burley Tobacco Society should vote this stock. The Court of Appeals in its recent decision has held in substance that this clause of the charter is void because it was not formally agreed to by the stockholders, and in accordance with that decision each stockholder will vote his stock in the election to be held in October for the Board of Directors for this Company.

The District Board recognizes that it is its duty to acquaint the growers with the present situation that confronts the Company and the Burley Tobacco Society. The grower now has to face and decide this question: Shall the Burley Tobacco Company and the Burley Tobacco Society continue or shall they be dissolved?

In adopting the charter of the Burley Tobacco Company the clause that has been struck out by the Court of Appeals was inserted for the sole purpose of protecting the Company against its enemies, who they feared would buy up this stock and control the Company by their votes.

Before the decision of the Court of Appeals was rendered on June 17, 1913, the enemies of the Burley movement became active in buying up this stock and securing options on it throughout nearly all of the counties in the Burley belt and got voting proxies in anticipation of a possible ruling of the Court, so that the very conditions attempted to be provided against in the charter of the Company have developed as was anticipated, and it is now a question as to whether the control shall be given to the enemies of the growers or shall be retained by the growers.

Receiver's Suits.

Beginning in the year 1909 and ending on the first day of July, 1913, aside from the four suits filed in the Federal Courts attacking the legality of the Burley Tobacco Society, there have been seven suits filed against the Society or the Company praying for receivers either for the Society and the property under its control or for the Burley Tobacco Company, and each suit seeking the dissolution of the organization.

The suit which has recently been decided by the Court of Appeals was brought mainly for the appointment of a receiver for the Company and for its dissolution and this suit is still pending in the Kenton Circuit Court.

On the first day of July two suits were brought in the Fayette Circuit Court asking for receivers for the 1908 and 1907 pools. These two suits were instituted by the same attorneys who prepared the suit in Kenton County. There is also pending in the Kenton Circuit Court another suit brought by these same attorneys seeking to hold the members of the District Board and of the 1909 pool and the Directors of the Burley Tobacco Company individually responsible for all of the business transacted by the Burley Tobacco Company on the ground that they had no authority to represent the Company. This suit involves about 2,000,000.00.

Would Destroy the Pool.

Judging from these various suits, and the connection between them, and those who represent the plaintiffs in those suits and their association with the enemies of the growers, it appears clear to the Board that there is a concerted and well planned movement on foot to disintegrate the Burley Tobacco Company and destroy the Burley Tobacco Society and the whole pool movement.

At a meeting of those who are opposed to the present management of the Burley Tobacco Company held in Lexington, June 26, there was set on foot an organization whose purpose is to get proxies of the stockholders of the Burley Tobacco Company with a view to controlling the Company and bringing about its dissolution. The committee selected in that meeting to control and vote those proxies is composed of the following persons: J. L. Yost, a lawyer of Walton, Ky., who controls $12 worth of stock from his 1909 pooled tobacco, who is the attorney that has brought the suit for the dissolution of the Company in the Kenton Circuit Court and the suit in the Kenton Circuit Court attempting to hold the District Board individually liable, for all of the investments made by this Company, on the technical ground that they were not duly elected as Directors of the Company, who is also the attorney who on July 1, 1913, instituted the two suits for receivers of the 1908 and 1907 pools in the Fayette Circuit Court; J. W. Glover, Chairman of the Committee, who has been a buyer for the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company for the last two years and who has been actively canvassing the Burley belt either in buying stock or securing proxies; Mark Hendricks of Fleming County, who helped make the purchase for the Louisville Tobacco Warehouse Company in 1910 that destroyed the pool of that year; Lee McGraw of Scott County, who absolutely refused to sell any of his tobacco last year in houses controlled by the Burley Tobacco Company, and Bowen Henry of Franklin County.

Advice As To Proxies.

From the previous attitude of these men toward the Burley movement and particularly the Burley Tobacco Company, the growers can judge for themselves as to the wisdom of placing the Company in their control. The District Board of the Burley Tobacco Society at this meeting recommends to the poolers and growers of tobacco who are interested in protecting their organization from the enemies of the movement that they place their proxies in the hands of committees which they may select in the several counties and that they choose these committees with care and place on them true and tried men who have the best interests of the Burley Tobacco Society and the Burley Tobacco Company at heart and let these men so selected as a committee in each county represent the stockholders in the stockholders' election to be held in October, 1913.

Unless the friends of the pool thus protect themselves all of the labor and sacrifice that has entered into the creation of the Burley Tobacco Society and the Burley Tobacco Company for the protection of the grower against the Trust will be laid waste.

District Board of the Burley Tobacco Society and the Burley Tobacco Company.

PROCLAMATION.

It appearing that there is a vacancy in the office of Circuit Clerk in Boone County Kentucky, caused by the resignation of J. A. Duncan, the regularly elected clerk, and said vacancy existing three months before the next regular election, at which county officers may be elected for the the year nineteen hundred and thirteen, an election is now ordered to be held in Boone county on the regular election day, for the purpose of electing a clerk to fill said vacancy; and the sheriff of Boone county is now ordered to call said election, and give proper notice thereof by publication as required by law, and to cause the polls to be opened for that purpose.

Given under my hand this 19th day of April, 1913.

J. W. CAMMACK.
Judge of Boone Circuit Court and Fifteenth Judicial District of Kentucky.

Copy Attest.—
CHAS. MAURER, Clerk.

In pursuance of the above order I hereby call an election to fill the vacancy in the office of circuit clerk, which election will be held Tuesday, Nov. 4, 1913.

W. R. ROGERS.
Clerk Boone County Court.

To the Voters of Boone County.

In last week's issue of the Recorder I find my opponent's answer to certain questions.

From his answer to the first question I find that he is in accord with the whole policy of the present administration. He only objects to one thing—the hauling of children at a greater expense that the salary of a good teacher. This has never been done in Boone county.

He tells us that he would call upon the Fiscal Court for certain taxes. The County Board of Education and not the County Superintendent estimates the amount of the school needs for the Fiscal Court. I stand for the reduction of the State school tax.

He fears that the farmers will give up their schools. I was a member of the Legislative Committee of the K. E. A. that drafted the bill reducing the minimum number of children in the census of a sub-district from 40 to 25 and on account of this law the Frogtown and Garrison schools were opened. Had the old law been enforced one-fifth of our schools would have been closed.

Consolidation is only practical where the roads are good and the people want it.

Mr. Yealey met me on the platform at Rabbit Hash, Florence and Union. At each of these places I stated that he said to me on Monday, June 2, that he would answer any school question in private but nothing in public. Why not in public? Also I stated that he voted for and worked for the Florence Graded school which closed the Pleasant Ridge school. Now, Mr. Voter, if these statements were not true why did not Mr. Yealey deny the charges when I made these statements publicly and in his presence?

The law now provides that the County Superintendent shall give his whole time to this work.

I shall continue to speak until the election. In these speeches I declare my platform. The public and my opponent are invited to hear me.

EDGAR C. RILEY.

The Commoner A Monthly.

Beginning August 15, The Commoner will appear as a monthly publication. Mr. Bryan will not only continue his editorial work on The Commoner, but under the new arrangement will be able to give his personal attention to the preparation of a larger part of the paper than he has been able to do for the weekly. It is believed that thru this change The Commoner will be made stronger and more effective as an active, vigilant supporter of the great work to which the Democratic party is consecrated.

On Tuesday, August 5th, at 9 a. m., will be held a competitive examination, in Burlington, for the purpose of selecting two students for scholarship from Boone Co. to the State University. All applicants for these places will send written applications to me before August 1, and should only two apply these two will be granted the appointments without examination.

The Division Boards will meet the last Saturday in this month to fill vacancies in the teaching force of the rural schools.

EDGAR C. RILEY,
Superintendent.

Resolutions of Respect.

Hamilton Lodge No. 354, F. and A. M., Big Bone, Ky.

Again an alarm has been sounded at the outer door of our lodge. The messager was death and our Bro. John Trumond Black answered the alarm. With him we have walked the pilgrimage of life; we remember him in scenes to which the world was not a witness and when the better feelings of humanity were exhibited without disguise. Though he may have had his faults he was our brother. Over these errors, whatever they may have been, we cast, while living, the broad mantle of Masonic charity. It should with much more reason enshroud in death. Bro. Black was 70 years of age, was initiated into the mysteries of Free Masonry in 1865; departed this life May 20th, 1913. Therefore be it Resolved, That Hamilton lodge has lost a true and faithful Brother. That we extend our sympathy to his surviving children and grandchildren.

That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon our records and a copy be sent to the Boone county Recorder for publication.

Committee—W. W. Grimsley, R. E. Ryle, J. S. Noel.

Philip T. Senour Dead.

Philip T. Senour a former resident of Boone county, died at his home near Sparta, Owen county, July 2d. Mr. Senour was born Feb. 29, 1834, in Kenton county, at the age of 22 he was married to Minerva P. Pearson and to them were born two children—A. K. Senour, and Mrs. Allie Senour, who married Thos. Rouse, of Boone county. Mr. Senour had two grand children and two great-grandchildren—Mrs. Grant Samuel, of Sparta, and K. E Rouse, of Chicago, Ill., Mr. K. E. Rouse and little 4-year old daughter, of Chicago, attended the funeral. Mr. Senour joined the Big Bone Baptist church, under the preaching of James A. Kirtley, at an early age, and was a deacon in the Baptist church at Sparta at the time of his death. Mr. Senour is survived by his wife two children, two grand children, two great-grand-children, two brothers, B. Senour, of Walton, and Thurston Senour, whose residence is unknown, and three sisters, Mrs G. W. Cree and Mrs. Howard Bogee, of Covington, and Mrs. Martha Alden, of Pittsburg, Pa. Mr. Murry Ryle, of Rabbit Hash, attended the funeral of Mr. Senour.

Ready For Work.

Frankfort.—R. C. Terrell, Commissioner of Public Roads announces that with his new assistants he is now in a position to handle all work accurately and speedily. The public road office has been in operation one year and has done much toward improving the conditions of the state. The office is prepared to give advice in regard to road and bridge laws and how road districts can be formed. When a difficult piece of road work is to be done and the local officials desire it an engineer will be sent to assist and direct the work if necessary. Bridge work will be given general supervision and the work finally inspected to see that the taxpayers get just what was contracted for. All plans and specifications and other information furnished free and speakers for public meetings and special conferences to discuss any road or bridge subject.—Ex.

If boys liked to milk cows as well as they like to play ball—but they don't. Do you know why? It is because the boy has no interest in the results of milking. If you want to keep your boy on the farm, take him into partnership, and he will help you build up your business, and be ready to succeed you by the time you are ready to quit.

Disheartened by repeated damages to the wharfboat, entailing heavy losses, Chas. Wolff is dismantling the boat and will quit the business. This leaves Lawrenceburg at present the only town of any importance along the Ohio without a wharfboat. None of the larger boats now land at this point on account of lack of facilities.—Lawrenceburg Press.

The auto horn is more common in this country than the dinner horn which could be heard in every direction about the noon hour half a century ago. The honk is one of the many warnings that progress has made necessary in the past few years.

Thirty Years From Now.

Every institution exists not for the present alone but for the future, also. The managers of every institution have a policy for its development—a purpose which it is to accomplish. The Boone County High School has a purpose in view for the future. That purpose is the preparation, along with the other schools of the county, of a body of men and women upon whom the burdens of their day may safely rest. We want to educate the leaders of the next generation.

The next thirty years will witness more changes in Boone county than have taken place in the three decades just past. The year 1943 will see better roads than we have now. Homes and farms now almost inaccessible during certain portions of the year will be reached by broad, smooth well kept turnpikes. The Boone Co. High School is ambitious to educate the engineers and builders of these roads. Improvements will have been made in methods of farming. As now, a few will be head and shoulders above their fellows in the success which they achieve and will serve as examples and leaders for others who are rising too. All will have advanced until our ways of the present day will be utterly out of date. The Boone County High School wants to be the agency that will determine who those leaders are to be.

Thirty years from now the school system will have made strides unforseen by many of us now. The common schools will have assumed their proper work of preparing people for life. The teachers will be men and women who are broad in their views, in sympathy with the life of our people, and of preparation broad enough to command the respect and attention of the people of their several communities. These teachers, will, many of them, be educated in the Boone County High School.

Thirty years from now we shall have a different set of business men throughout the county. We want the best of them to have diplomas from our county high school or some other good school. We think it safe to predict that they will.

Thirty years from now our county officials will doubtless be all different from those of to-day. It is our ambition that most of them be trained in the Boone County High School and that they be not only honest and efficient but progressive and high of purpose, full of inspiration toward greater things. We want to educate the congressman, the judge, perhaps the governor.

What young man or woman does not wish to be among the leaders? Who of you doesn't want to be one of the best in whatever line of endeavor you undertake? Then you had better be getting ready. Other things being equal, the amount of training you get will determine exactly the height you are going to reach. When you reach the level which is the limit of your preparation, there you are going to stop. You may be crowded out, then, by some one who is just a little better.

Go to school. I don't care what school if it is the best one you can get to attend. Don't waste your time in a poor one. Find out the school within your reach that is giving its students the best preparation for life, that is teaching the most valuable lessons and inspiring the highest ideals, the one that most appeals to you as being the one that will make the best man or woman of you, then sacrifice everything to get into that school and stay there until you can take it with you wherever you go. Think about what you expect to be thirty years from now.

EVERETT L. DIX.

Base Ball.

The Belleview base ball team defeated the Burlington team at Burlington, last Saturday afternoon 5 to 2. The Burlington team pulled an unusual number of bones which added to several inexcusable errors made the game very rotten on its part. Huey was hit hard by the visitors their swipes amounting to nine, among them two doubles and a trippie. Deck and Wingate being the heavy sluggers. In the 9th inning Burlington threw away an excellent opportunity to win out after two men were down. White made a hit, Hager was hit by a pitched ball and Huey was given a base on balls. Deck was ballooning good and strong, when Kelly connected with the ball but had taken root at the plate and he could not pull loose. Had Belleview been in Burlington's place it would have won the game right then and there.

Belleview has the best aggregation of ball players she has ever sent out, and it is very doubtful about the county every having had a better one. The boys have profited by the instruction given them by that old head in the game, Hubert Brady.

Burlington and Erlanger will hook up at the Burlington park again next Saturday afternoon.

Religious Services At The Lonesome Hole.

A number of Erlanger people are in camp at Lonesome Hole on Gunpowder creek this week. Among them are S. S. Lappin and family. It has been decided to hold religious services on Sunday July 20. All who are in reach and can do so are invited to bring lunch and be present at the camp by 11 a. m. Mr. Lappin, who was formerly pastor of the Christian church at Erlanger and who is editor of the Christian Standard, will preach. There will also be song services, old hymns being used.

William Pope Dead.

William Pope, who resided at the headwaters of Middle creek, died last Thursday afternoon after an illness of several weeks of a brain trouble. He was in his 52d year and was a son of W. H. Pope by his first wife. The deceased leaves a widow, who is a daughter of Wm. McGiasson, of Hebron neighborhood, and is also survived by two sons, Vernon and Furnish, and two daughters, Mrs. W. G. Kite, of Waterloo, and Miss Maude. The remains were interred in the Odd-Fellows cemetery at Burlington, last Saturday at 11 a. m., in the presence of many relatives and friends. Mr. Pope was born and reared on the farm where he spent his entire life. He was a good citizen and neighbor and a kind and indulgent father and a loving husband. The family has the sympathy of many friends in their bereavement.

Rev. Edgar Riley conducted a short service at the grave, his remarks being appropriate and calculated to do the living much good if heeded.

Talking Traction Again.

The recent big real estate deal at Erlanger in which Covington parties were the purchasers has started another discussion pertaining to the extension of the traction road to that point. The fact that the Covington parties were willing to make so large an investment in realestate there and the further fact that the purpose to which it is said the property will be put requires much better passenger transportation facilities than Erlanger has at present, hence the citizens argue that the purchasers of the Bedinger property have some traction dope not yet made public, and which induced their recent deal for the site for a pleasure resort.

Sullivan-Kirkpatrick.

Newton Sullivan, Jr., and Miss Nelle Kirkpatrick, both of Burlington, were married at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. Susan Kirkpatrick, last Wednesday evening at 7 o'clock, Rev. W. F. Wallace, Lutheran minister, of near Florence, officiating. The ceremony was witnessed by only a few of the contracting parties, many friends. Mr. Sullivan is engaged in the grocery business in Burlington, where he is very popular and numbers his friends by the dozen. The bride was for several years the chief operator at the local telephone exchange, where she made friends of all who had that service. Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan have a host of friends who wish them all the prosperity and good things this life affords. They have gone to housekeeping in the Walton flats at the corner of Washington and Jefferson streets.

The primary campaign has reached the point at which all sorts of false reports will begin to circulate in regard to the candidates. The voters ought not to pay any attention to the reports started at this late day for the purpose of injuring a candidate. All that is known in regard to the candidates has been told by this time.

Timely showers of rain continue to visit this locality and the crops look fine and are growing nicely.

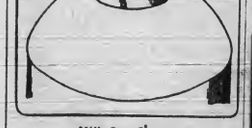
Isthmus in History and Romance

By Edward W. Pickard

Mr. Pickard is that type of globe-trotting author who seeks the quaint and curious places and people as subjects for his clever descriptive articles. In his present series of twelve articles which we have arranged to print, he has touched not only the actual work of building the canal, and the people who have accomplished it, but has gone into what the newspaper worker knows as the side lines, and which as a rule are of as much interest as the main story. This is particularly true in this case. After our readers have completed the last of Mr. Pickard's articles they will have a better understanding of the Panama Canal, and conditions within and surrounding the canal zone.

The first article of the series will be printed in our issue of



DAIRY FACTS

SUPERIOR MILK CAN COVER

New York Man Invents Device Which Forms Tight Closure and Can Be Securely Locked.

In describing a milk can cover invented by R. O. Thompson of Campbell Hall, N. Y., the Scientific American says:

"The object here is to provide a cover which will form a perfectly tight closure for a vessel and be capable of being securely locked in closing position, so as to prevent access to the can by unauthorized persons. For this purpose the inventor constructs the neck of the can and the closure, which is fitted to the same so as to have snugly engaging surfaces, eliminating all possibility of leakage; and he provides an attachment for the top of the can which co-operates with the edge of the closure to enable a locking device to secure a closure in position on the can until the same is removed.

FAST MILKING BY MACHINES

Problem is Long Way From Being Satisfactorily Solved—High Class of Help Is Necessary.

The problem of milking by means of machines is still a long way from being solved, but we are much nearer the goal than five years ago, or even a year ago, says the Farm and Fireside.

The New York experiment station has announced the result of a milking machine experiment which covered a period of four years. The experiments show that, including the time required to get the machines ready and to wash them after milking, cows can be milked by machine in 3.86 minutes to the cow, as compared with seven minutes for hand milking. A higher class of help is, however, necessary to milk by machinery.

For dairies of less than fifteen cows the use of machines was considered unprofitable and not to be recommended.

The hundreds of applications filed in the United States patent office show the interest in machine milking. Present day developments indicate that best results are obtained by the intermittent suction principle, but we look for the time when milking machines will be cheaper and simpler. The cream separator of today is about one-fourth as large as one of equal capacity twenty years ago. A similar simplification may be true with milking machines.

SELECTING BREED FOR DAIRY

One Best Adapted for Prevailing Conditions Should be Preferred—Things to Consider.

In selecting a dairy breed it is not a matter of which is the best breed, but the one best suited for prevailing conditions. Select with a view to adaptability and for the purpose for which the animal is kept. Some breeds are noted for the quantity of milk they produce; others for the richness of their milk; others for the color of cream or butter. All these things must be taken into consideration before selecting a breed. Of the dairy breeds the Holstein has a number of high producing animals. They point with pride to such animals as Colantha IV Johanna with a record of over 1,100 pounds of butter in the year, and the late queen of the dairy world, Banastine Belle De Kol, with a record of over 1,300 pounds of butter in 365 days. The Jersey has Jacoba Irene, the Guernsey, Dolly Dimple, and the Ayrshire, Netherhall Brownie, all of which were a credit to their respective breeds.

High Grade Losers.

High-grade milch cows are high-grade losers. Earners are cheap at any purchase-price. Losers are cheap at no price, and not even as a gift. The dairyman with the so-called "average cows" ought to be grateful to the pirates who would steal them.

Dehorned Cow is Safe.

The cow that is dehorned is always more conveniently handled and safer to have about the place, but it is not always advisable to dehorn pure-bred cattle that are intended for sale or show purposes.

HOME GARDEN CLUBS GROWING

Campfire Girls of Louisville Use Vacant Lots.

ADVICE FROM AN EXPERT.

Children Taught to Help Furnish Their Own Tables With Fresh Vegetables. Idea Is Spreading to Country Towns. Future Men and Women in Close Contact With Growing Things.

The continual cry, "Back to the soil," that is heard in the newspapers and magazines is keeping the attention of the people in the country as well as those in the city fixed on gardening and farming. This is not only true of the small town and the back country, but it is also true of our big cities, for home garden clubs are growing in popularity and in numbers each season.

This spring the city of Louisville organized a home garden club that gardening among men, women and children, and especially the children, might be pushed. That the work might be real and that definite results might be obtained, vacant lots were secured at various points and model gardens planted. A man who had practical experience was engaged to take charge of the work and is now busy moving from place to place suggesting plans and methods by which the children can help furnish their own tables with vegetables fresh from their own gardens.

The photo which accompanies this article was taken on the outskirts of Louisville, where a group of four Campfire Girls have a model four plot garden.

This work will have a vital effect upon the men and women of tomorrow by giving them an understanding and a growth which can only come through close contact with the soil and growing things. Education is gradually shifting to a rational use of books and a fuller use of the life which the child leads in the garden, in the home, and under blue skies. It means an education that makes red blood throb in young veins; it means an education that does things in the everyday world; it means an education that is close to the primitive; it means an education that fits the child for life.

"BACK TO THE SOIL."

Movement Can Be Aided by Modern Ideals and Methods.

The effort to better rural conditions is touching a fundamental problem of American life. The "back to the soil" agitation can have little permanent effect until we go back to the tiller of the soil with the inspiration and enlightenment of modern ideals and methods. We must carry the message into every fertile valley and to every mountain side; we must get back from the traveled roads and the steam and electric lines; we must reach the little isolated schoolhouses, the country churches and every other agency that can be a source of help. We can give the schoolteacher and the itinerant preacher a broader viewpoint and deeper interest in the welfare of their charges—an interest deeper because more practical and more hopeful.

Nor must we rest with this. A striking feature of the new movement is the determined effort to show the business man in the city that he has a point of intimate contact with the farmer—that in mutual help is to be found advantage for both.

We like this work because it is based on sound social lines. It is in harmony with the finest ideals of the time. There is immense satisfaction to Kentuckians in finding the old state assuming a place of leadership in an undertaking so splendid and so promising.—Editorial in Louisville Herald, April 2.

How to Aid Schools.

Our public schools are not what they shonld be by any means mainly because of the disinterestedness of the parents. Co-operation is absolutely necessary if you would have a successful school taught in your community. Show your interest by visiting your school. Get acquainted with the teacher, learn her strong as well as her weak point and let her understand that you are interested. Let the children also know that you place a value upon their work.—Berry Citizen.

OUR $5,000,000 COCKROACH

by L. W. PICKARD

CUCARACHA SLIDE

Colon, C. Z.—If you wish to hear "language," just say "Cucaracha" to one of the engineers engaged in building the central division of the Panama canal.

Cucaracha in Spanish means a cockroach. In the Canal Zone it means the greatest of the numerous slides that have made the completion of the Culebra cut so different and so expensive. Why that slide was named the cockroach I could not discover. Certainly even the Panamanian cockroach is not so large, and he moves much more swiftly.

Before the first French company quit operations in 1889 the Cucaracha began to slide, and it first gave the Americans trouble in 1905, the second year of their work on the canal. Between then and July 1, 1913, nearly 3,000,000 cubic yards of material was removed from the canal because of it. The slide had broken nearly 1,900 feet from the axis of the canal, and covered an area of 47 acres. Last fall the engineers were congratulating themselves on having the cockroach stopped, but in January it started moving again, and nearly covered the bottom of the cut.

"What is going to be the cost of that slide to the United States?" I asked Colonel Goethals as we stood at the edge of the Culebra cut and looked across the chasm to where the steam shovels and hundreds of men were laboring to remove the vast mass of earth and rock.

"Well," the chief engineer replied, "our estimate is that by the time it is all cleared up it will have required the expenditure of about $5,000,000 more than the cut would have cost if the slide had not occurred. It is still moving, and has broken so far back that now we are shoveling the crest away from the canal in order to relieve the pressure from above. Before the movement in January began the excavation in the cut at that point had been carried to within 15 feet of the canal bottom. Digging out that 15 feet of material removed the support of the Cucaracha, and down it came. If we could have turned in the water and taken out the 15 feet with dredges, I think the pressure of the water would have done much to prevent the slide."

"What of the future?" I asked. "Is there any danger of slides occurring after the canal is opened?"

"Absolutely none, I believe," he answered. "When the excavating and dynamiting have ceased and the water is in, it will be quite safe. We have the slides and breaks mapped out as far back as there is any indication of their extending, and are working back to those lines. It is merely a matter of persistency and patience."

"When will the water be let into the cut?"

In October," replied Colonel Goethals. "But there will be no celebration over the event. That one in January, 1915, is giving us enough worry, and we don't forget the premature and ridiculous celebration by Ferdinand de Lesseps many years ago. We will just turn the water in—that's all. Then we can complete the excavation there with suction dredges, which will do the work cheaply and rapidly."

"And when will boats be passing through the canal?"

"That I cannot say, but the sooner the better, for the operating crews must be properly trained before that January celebration. I wouldn't have an accident occur for anything. If we cannot have commercial vessels going through before then, I shall ask the government to send naval vessels through, so the operating forces can get the experience. Anyhow, I want to see the canal opened to commerce as soon as possible, for it is revenue I am after."

Another day I stood with Col. D. D. Gaillard, the engineer of the central division, outside his office in Empire, and watched his army laboring in the cut, the completion of which has been his biggest task and greatest glory. Right at our feet a big area had sunk down 70 feet in a night, and if there had not been warnings of the break a wing of the colonel's office building would have gone down with it. "We had just time to remove that wing," said he, "and my office force is rather nervous now, for there are three big cracks under the main building. I expect it, too, will have to be torn down very soon.

"These slides used to make us rather despondent, for it seemed as if they never would stop, but the progress we are making this year has cheered up the operating forces again, and we can see the end of the task. The slide and the break are quite different. In the former the earth slides at an angle down a sloping face of rock, and in the latter the mass sinks straight down and at the bottom bulges out into the channel. Along both sides of the cut you can see numerous small slides and breaks. Those are in pockets in the rock wall, and, annoying as they are, they only need cleaning out. The Cucaracha started as a slide and now it is both a slide and a break.

"Incidentally, that cut should be a great place for geologists. I have found in it every kind of rock except granite, and many interesting fossils and petrification have been discovered there. In one stratum through which we cut there were found a great number of teeth of prehistoric varieties of sharks."

"What is your opinion concerning the date when the canal will be ready for commerce?" I asked.

"If I had my say," said the colonel emphatically, "not a commercial vessel would be allowed in the canal until it is absolutely complete down to the smallest detail. In some of the many safety devices were not in operation and an accident should result, the canal would get a black eye from which it might not recover for a long time. Officially, the time for the completion of the canal is still January 1, 1915. It may be done before that date, but in March of this year there was still about $50,000,000 worth of work ahead of us.

"We who have been digging the canal and are still here in positions of responsibility—I mean the members of the Isthmian canal commission—are rather fearful concerning that part of the Adamson bill which permits the president to dissolve the commission whenever in his judgment the canal is near enough to completion. We feel that it would be extremely unjust not to allow us to remain 'on the job' until after the grand formal opening in January, 1915. It would be much like permitting a boy to complete his university course, and then taking him home before he receives his diploma."

And then Colonel Gaillard said some things about Mr. Taft's efforts to put into effect that clause last January, which must have made the ex-president's ears tingle a bit.

"The Culebra cut is like a three-ring circus. I don't know which way to look," said one visitor to the zone.

It is indeed a scene of wonderful activity. Giant steam shovels are scattered through it, scooping up enormous masses of rock and earth; on half a dozen tracks on as many different levels snorting and puffing locomotives are swiftly drawing loaded or empty dirt trains; along the ledges are batteries of steam and compressed air drills, making holes for dynamite; suddenly there is a toot-tooting of a steam whistle, a hundred men scurry to shelter, and a dynamite blast fills the air with sound and dirt and rocks.

Watching the steam shovels is a favorite occupation of visitors who venture down into the Culebra cut. They seem almost human, and do a vast amount of work. Their dippers hold five cubic yards of material, weighing on an average a little more than three tons. This spoil is emptied into cars of several kinds. Flat cars with one high side are unloaded by plows that are drawn the length of the train by cables upon a winding drum. The others are dump cars, the largest of which are operated by compressed air from the locomotive. The trains haul the spoil from the cut to dumping grounds, which on an average are about 12 miles distant. Some 13,000,000 cubic yards of this material was used as filling for the long breakwater at the Pacific entrance.

Frankfort, July 10.—Walter Conrad, Jasper Conrad and Luther Conrad, brothers, all of Harrison county, were admitted to the penitentiary to-day to serve sentences of from two to twenty one years for killing Troy Duncan. Walter Conrad married Duncan's sister Alice, and she and Duncan's father witnessed the tragedy. The men conducted stores near by, and disputed over the sale of a flour for which Duncan had the exclusive agency.

While workmen were excavating for a concrete pavement in front of the old Presbyterian church at Augusta the skeleton of an Indian was discovered about eighteen inches below the ground. Several implements were found near the body, and almost a hatful of beads, denoting high office. The beads were made from deer horns and were about one half inch long.—Augusta Chronicle.

Walton Lodge, Knights of Pythias, had work in the rank of Page at their lodge room last Thursday night when Clay Baker was given that rank. The lodge has three petitions before it and there will be work on the regular meeting nights for the next two months. Members are urged to be present on these occasions to assist in the work.

Last Thursday John C. Bedinger purchased the J. E. Williams farm near the north end of the corporation line consisting of 35 acres, for $9,000. This is a very desirable piece of property and has changed hands numerous times in the past five years and always at an advanced price. Mr. Bedinger purchased the place for a home and will move there this fall.

On Sunday July 6th a delightful surprise dinner was tendered I. W. Stephenson at his home in Kenton county, in honor of his 57th birthday anniversary. The day was most pleasantly spent by those in attendance, and all wished Mr. Stephenson many more birthdays of health, happiness and prosperity. Those present were the following: Mr. and Mrs. L. C. Northcutt, Mr. and Mrs. Newt. Perry, Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Brevard, Mr. and Mrs. B. P. Hume, Mr. and Mrs. P. F. Martin, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Frazier, Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Stephenson, Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Stephenson, Mr. and Mrs. F. G. Stephenson, Mrs. J. C. Northcutt, Miss Gladys Martin, Messrs. Vincent Stephenson, John Stephenson, Thos. L. Stephenson, Alfred Hume, Drewey Hume, Randolph Martin, Edgar Martin, Harry Perry.

On Wednesday of last week J. C. Bedinger and James B. Allen, our local stock dealers, had the misfortune to lose eleven head of fine lambs at the Southern Railway depot. They had loaded a car with 133 head of lambs and when the engine crew attempted to switch the car, using a long pole for the purpose, the car was overturned and the lambs piled into one mass. Before the owners could extricate the animals eleven of the poor beasts were smothered to death. The others were considerable bruised and presented a rather dilapidated appearance. When put on the Cincinnati market the animals were considerably depreciated and did not bring what they should had they been in good condition. Messrs. Bedinger and Allen have made a claim on the railroad company for the lambs killed and the depreciation in value of the lambs.

Tomlin-Dickey.

Monday afternoon the beautiful country home of Mrs. Belle W. Dickey, near Union, was the scene of a very pretty wedding when her charming daughter Miss Helen Lee Dickey was given in marriage to Judge J. G. Tomlin of Walton. The affair was designed to be a modest one out of deference to the wishes of the contracting parties, and only a few relatives and very intimate friends were invited. At the appointed hour, five o'clock, as the golden rays of the sun were casting their shadows from the west, and the soft strains of the wedding march from Lohengrin were played on the piano by Thos. Hughes, the happy couple came gracefully from the house and took their position on the lawn in front of the ministers who pronounced the solemn vows that bound them together as husband and wife. The couple were preceded by Misses Elida Dickey and Emily Hughes who were charmingly attired in white lingerie frocks. Rev. Meigs V. Crouse of the Presbyterian church, Cincinnati, in a very beautiful ceremony of that church, outlined the solemn and weighty obligations of husband and wife, to which the contracting parties answered in a feeling manner, followed by the placing of the ring on the finger of the bride by the groom as the final plighting of the troth. Then Rev. H. C. Wayman of the Walton Baptist church, pastor of the groom, pronounced the bans uniting the couple as husband and wife. Congratulations and kisses for the bride followed by showers of rice relieved the solemnity of the events and developed the happy state that all felt in the joining together of two useful lives so suited to each other. The bride was very attractively gowned in white crepe de chine, lace trimmed, hand embroidered. The groom wore the regulation walking suit of dark material. Refreshments of ice cream, cake and lemonade were served on the lawn. Judge and Mrs. Tomlin left that evening for Louisville going from there to Chicago, and thence to Western Canada for a honeymoon of about three weeks, returning to Walton where they will occupy the handsome home of Judge Tomlin. The bride is a young lady of most attractive qualities of heart and mind, and is the daughter of the late Fielding Dickey. Her charming personality and suavity of manner, and her culture and refinement have made her popular with a large circle, and will contribute very largely to the happiness of the man to whom she has given her heart and hand. Judge Tomlin is one of nature's noblemen, and is of the type that brings happiness to the home, being of the highest moral character, generous by nature and of the most kindly disposition. The blending of two such useful lives would naturally mean a most happy household, and for which and to which a long and happy and prosperous future is tendered the best wishes of their numerous friends. Those present at the wedding, were Mrs. Belle W. Dickey and children Misses Nida, Isabel and Janie, and Master Fielding; Dr. and Mrs. Wm. S. Tomlin, of Indianapolis; Dr. and Mrs. Waller Herndon, of Lexington; Dr. and Mrs. Robert Herndon of Ludlow; Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Garvey, and sons, James and Clifford, Mrs. J. S. Matson and son Thomas, of Covington; Mrs. C. R. McDowell, of Danville; Mrs. Katie Rice, of Georgetown; Mrs. M. E. Waterfield (grandmother of the bride), of Covington, Rev. and Mrs. Meigs V. Crouse, of Cincinnati; Dr. T. A. Dickey of Muddletown, Ohio; Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Huey, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Hughes, Rev. and Mrs. H. C. Wayman, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Sleet, Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Mayhugh, Thos. Hughes, Mr. and Mrs. Jno. L. Vest, Misses Emma Hunt, Emily Hughes, Jean Chambers, Nannie Chambers; D. B. Wallace.

DINE'S SPECIAL

BRASS BED OFFER

INCLUDING SPRING AND MATTRESS,

You'll like this bed

For it is this season's latest style, an exclusive pattern, entirely different from any you ever saw before. The extreme height of head gives it a most magnificent appearance and its most beautiful mounts and trimmings also add to its charms. We selected this particular pattern from the line of the largest brass bed factory in the country, their designs are acknowledged the handsomest on the market, and we do not think that we made a mistake with our selection, and you will unhesitatingly admit that it is a real beauty.

This bed is built right

Besides being the largest Brass Bed Factory this factory is also the oldest; their reputation for excellent bed building is unsurpassed. Every point has been carefully looked after in making this bed perfect; every filler is securely fastened, every mount is carefully adjusted, in fact, it is just so in every detail, assuring a lifetime service. The locks are so fitted, that it is an utter impossibility for either of the ends leaning, which is a very common fault with most beds.

This bed wont tarnish

We've told you about the extreme beauty of this bed, and its excellent construction; now we want to mention about the lacquer. The lacquer is the finish on the bed, and it is this which you should inquire mostly into when you make a bed purchase. This bed is finished with the Hickson Process Lacquer, the only Insured Lacquer in the World, carrying with it an Indemnity Policy For Five Years, the factory agreeing to make good any bed which may prove defective within that period. The superiority of this lacquer has been demonstrated through various chemical tests without any harmful effects. Fly specks, perspiration, hard rubbing and other causes which generally tarnish beds of common lacquer will in no way injure the beautiful Hickson Process Lacquer

The usual care required in the cleaning of most brass beds does not have to be applied in the care of this bed. It may be washed with soap and water. We can furnish it in either polished or satin finish.

$29.60 is the price
including spring and mattress

The price we quote for this entire outfit would be reasonable for the bed alone, but to make this one great, big value we are including a heavy, sanitary steel spring, which we guarantee against sagging, and a 45-pound mattress, made in compliance with sanitary bedding laws.

If you were to compare this outfit with what most stores offer you, you will readily agree with us that it cannot be duplicated elsewhere at our price.

Owing to their inability to secure laborers, several farmers have been forced to the necessity of abandoning a portion of their wheat and rye crops which this year are the best grown in the country in many years. This is to be regretted, as good wheat, the kind Robertson county always grows, is needed at all times.—Mt. Olivet Tribune-Democrat.

LOOKS LIKE WAR WITH MEXICO.

Washington, July 22.—Intervention in Mexico is no longer a mere possibility; it has even passed through the realm of probability and is rapidly approaching the point of certainty.

Upon developments in the immediate future will depend whether or not the U. S. employs its armed forces in restoring order and tranquility in that country, preliminary to the establishment of a stable government by the Mexicans themselves.

Public men here were reluctant until to-day to speak of intervention above a whisper. Now they are discussing its advisability out loud, and even on the floor of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

That the time for drastic action by the United States has come was the expressed judgment of Senators and Representatives this afternoon.

Men of great conservatism in both parties laid aside their customary caution in discussing the affairs of the foreign country that maintains the semblance of friendly relations with us and spoke frankly and plainly of the imminence of intervention.

ATTORNEYS REPLY

To Report of District Board of Burley Tobacco Society.

On July 3d, 1913, there appeared in the Lexington Herald an article explaining the conduct of the District Board of the Burley Tobacco Society who have also had charge of and managed the affairs of the Burley Tobacco Company since its organization. Since that date this article has been given to various other newspapers for publication. Some of the statements contained in this article need no comment, but there are some that might be misleading if left unexplained and we therefore desire to answer this article as briefly as the subject will permit, and also briefly explain our connection with the case of Stansifer et al vs. LeBus et al which has led to the present active campaign by the acting board of directors of the Burley Tobacco Company for their continuation in office.

Nearly four years have passed since the pooling of the 1909 crop of tobacco and the formation of the Burley Tobacco Company, but until the suit of Stansifer at al vs. LeBus et al was decided by the Court of Appeals on June 17th not a single printed statement as to the financial condition of either the 1909 pool or the Burley Tobacco Company had ever been given to the poolers who furnished the sinews of war. Now that they have published a statement we desire to call the attention of the poolers and stockholders to some salient facts which it discloses.

According to this statement the 1909 pooled tobacco brought $10,752,465.15. There has been paid to the farmers $7,212,921.76 and there is now on hands $148,798.20. Just how much of this $148,798.20 will ever reach the farmer remains to be seen but assuming that the farmers will get it all, this makes a total of only $7,361,719.96 leaving a difference of $3,390,745.19 which goes to pay expenses and the 10 per cent constituting the capital stock of the Burley Tobacco Company. This capital stock is $1,051,802.53 leaving a net balance of $2,338,942.66 for expenses and salaries.

There are many farmers in the Burley district (who win their bread by honest toil who would like to see a statement published by these same gentlemen showing how much each of them received of this sum of $2,338,942.66 rather than so much discussion about the friends and enemies of the pool.

There is another thing that the farmers would like to know viz. What has become of the earnings of the Burley Tobacco Company in handling the 1909 pooled tobacco, about which there has been so much talk. From the published statement there was paid out of the 1909 pool for rehandling, the sum of $890,259.80 and for insurance and storage the sum of $463,656.11 making a total of $1,353,915.91 which went into the hands of these gentlemen as acting officers of the Burley Tobacco Company to handle. Notwithstanding the fact that in the published statement of the 1909 pool the item of "Rehandling" is listed at $890,259.80 this item is entirely absent from the statement of the Burley Tobacco Company. We realize that a part of it was actually paid out in rehandling the tobacco, but the stockholders should know how much was thus paid out and how much if any found its way to the "general expense account." There was paid to the Burley Tobacco Company for Insurance and Storage the sum of $463,656.11 while the published statement concerning the Burley Tobacco Co. shows only $263,870.40. We realize that a part of the difference was paid out for rent of warehouses but how much? Was the whole difference of $199,785.71 so paid? If so, the stockholders should know it. If not they should know how much was paid.

Mr. LeBus and his associates have announced their intention to call in the warehouse receipts heretofore issued and to issue in lieu thereof a certificate of stock in the Burley Tobacco Company. This announcement is made in the face of the decision of the Court of Appeals that they have never at any time been officers of the Burley Tobacco Company, but are guilty of the most indefensible usurpation. Their acts in this respect will therefore be absolutely void. However, this is a very stragatic move on their part and is for the evident purpose of luring the small stockholder into the execution of a proxy for their continuation in office which is undertaken to be written so as to be irrevokable by the owner of the stock. Were it not that they have tied the hands of the Kenton Circuit Court by supersedeas and the Court of Appeals were in vacation this high handed move would be promptly stopped. It has been repeatedly [illegible] and never denied by Redman, who has used the [illegible] ill for a long while to [illegible] who has been at the home of his daughter Mrs. Anna Black burn, in Covington, returned last Sunday much improved in health and is able to sit up, which his many friends are glad to learn.

Died—Samuel Beyland, aged 75, at his home in Bank Lick, Friday, July 11th, after a long illness. The funeral took place Monday at 2 o'clock, the remains being interred in the Baptist cemetery here. He leaves a wife and two sons, Edward and Howard, to mourn the loss of a kind father and loving husband. Mr. Byland was a farmer and good christian gentleman and leaves a host of friends who were pained to hear of his death. He was a brother of John C. Byland, formerly of this place but now of Covington.

Filing of these two suits we placed Mr. LeBus and Mr. Rankin on the witness stand and from their evidence developed the startling fact that there has been on deposit in the banks of Lexington since February 1st, 1910 approximately one quarter of a million dollars belonging to the 1907 poolers upon which not one cent of interest has been collected or attempted to be collected. This shows one of the two things viz.—Either a desire to favor some one or bad business management. In either event the stockholders should consider well before electing this kind of a board. They haven't even made enough out of this fund to pay its taxes, and now offer as the sole and only reason why this fund is not paid out is because they are tied up with tax suits.

Another remarkable fact disclosed by this examination is that $1350.00 was paid to the attorneys for the plaintiffs in the case of Gaitskill vs. The Burley Tobacco Society, without any court order directing that it be done. This was in addition to paying the attorneys for the society. We make no charge of any kind in regard to this. We merely state the fact.

A great deal is said in the statement concerning the committee of five to look after proxies. The duties of this committee is to urge the stockholders of each county to hold mass meetings and select some one of their own choice to vote their stock at the election. The committee has never made a recommendation as to who this should be and will not do so in the future. They will simply urge that mass meetings be held and discussions had and some good man or men be selected, the selection to be the free voluntary choice of the stock holders locally. It is true that the committee of five appointed to look after proxies may have been like thousands of others, driven from the active support of Mr. LeBus and his close associates by their conduct, but no effort is made to say that the committee are not each and every one poolers and stockholders of the Burley Tobacco Company, and as none of them draw any salary from the Burley Tobacco Company, it is but fair to assume that they have the best interests of the Company at heart.

Specific complaint is made against four members of the comtee, Mr. J. W. Glover, being the chairman, is denounced for being a buyer for the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company This is untrue to begin with, as Mr. Glover is not now and never has been an employee of the R. J. Reynold's Tobacco Company, but he has made purchases of tobacco since 1909 which he has sold, partly to the R. J. Reynolds' Tobacco Company and partly to independent factories, and an examination of the records of the United States Government at Covington will verify this fact. They "holler" loudly about Mr. Glover's supposed "Trust" connection but they forget all about their own Mr. Micke the general manager of The Stratter Bros., Factory, who until after the purchase of this factory by Mr. LeBus was not only an employee of the R. J. Reynolds' Tobacco Company, but a stockholder as well, and has continued to be a stockholder since his employment by Mr. LeBus as manager. They also forget to state that from the very beginning Mr. Glover was an active supporter of the pooling movement and during the years 1906, 1907 and 1909 pooled and delivered to the Burley Tobacco Society more than one million pounds of tobacco, and served in more than one official capacity for the Society and left a record with it that is not open to attack. It is only after the failure of the pool in 1910 when he made a purchase of tobacco on his own account, and does not now favor Mr. LeBus that he is branded as an agent of the "Trust." A stockholder of the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company who favors Mr. LeBus is all right in every respect, but a stockholder of the Burley Tobacco Company who buys tobacco on the open market and sells to the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company and other companies, is on this account, alone, deemed by him as an enemy of the pool. Stockholders may well ask, why this inconsistency?

Mr. Vest is next assailed. The objection urged against him is that he is an attorney and owns only $12.00 worth of stock. This situation is the same as hundreds of others and we contend against the principle of confiscation of the small shareholder more than for the amount of money involved. It is all too common a thing for trusted officers in a corporation in this country to fatten upon the small stockholders who permits this done rather than fight for their rights, where their interests are so small.

Mr. Hendrix is next assailed. Everybody in the State knows that the 1910 pool failed through lack of confidence in the men "Higher up" so further comment concerning Mr. Hendrix is deemed needless.

Mr. Nagraw is assailed because he did not sell his tobacco last winter in a Warehouse operated by Mr. LeBus and his associates. He agrees with them and says the treatment they accorded him would not warrant him in so doing. They don't even complain [illegible] Henry, and therefore the [illegible] that he must be [illegible] above the average, else he [illegible] have escaped.

[illegible] underlying error that [illegible] the whole statement [illegible] assuming that those [illegible] usurped the functions [illegible] and who have as we [illegible] unlawfully and [illegible] the money of that [illegible] from personal in- [illegible] from public good, [illegible] "Company." We [illegible] the great mass of the [illegible] whose money is being used, constitute the Company and we desire to make this plain statement. If Mr. LeBus and his associates are the Company, we are against it. If the stockholders are the Company, then we are for it.

A great deal is also said concerning the destruction of the Burley Tobacco Society and Burley Tobacco Company. What is the proper course for the Burley Tobacco Company to pursue in the future is a question that should enlist the earnest thought of every stockholder. Whether it is best to liquidate, or to make certain changes and continue, or continue it just as it is at present, is a question about which stockholders honestly differ, and a majority of the stockholders in interest should determine after a full, fair and intelligent discussion of the facts, after they are once thoroughly made known. In the published statement not a word is said as to whether the factory has been operated since May 1, 1912 at a profit or at a loss. Nor a word is said as to whether the loose leaf warehouses have made or lost money when the legitimate expenses are taken into consideration. They ask the endorsement of the stockholders and as a means of securing that endorsement denounce those who are opposed to Mr. LeBus as enemies of the farmers. Why not make a full and comprehensive statement of all the facts and figures and stand or fall on that record. No man can express an intelligent opinion concerning a business where he does not know the facts, in all their detail but we do believe that we are warranted in saying that unless the Burley Tobacco Co. is divorced from one man domination and placed upon a legal basis, and run in the future upon principles that control and actuate the conduct of other similar corporations, that sooner or later the capital stock will be absorbed in salaries and the Company will go "flat broke."

Concerning the suit of Stansifer et al vs. LeBus et al, the real facts are as follows:—On September 23d, 1912, a meeting of the Kenton County Board of Control was held in Independence, Ky., at which there were present various poolers Mr. Stansifer being among them. Mr. F. P. Mann, since deceased, and up until the time of his death a member of the District Board of the Burley Tobacco Society, presided at the meeting. After some discussion of the failure to produce any statement concerning the 1909 pool, a resolution was adopted appointing Mr. W. T. Loomis and Mr. Vest, one of the attorneys, as a committee to go to Lexington and examine and report the status of the Burley Tobacco Society and Burley Tobacco Co. On Sept. 30th 1912, they went to Lexington and after having examined the books of the Burley Tobacco Society applied to Mr. J. M. Rankin, the acting secretary, to be permitted to examine the books of the Burley Tobacco Co. After several hours delay and a full conference between Mr. Rankin and Mr. LeBus, they were positively and flatly refused to see a single book. After being thus unceremoniously "kicked out" of the office, Mr. Loomis and Mr. Vest went to the County Clerk's office and upon reading the articles of incorporation Mr. Vest discovered the clauses which have been recently construed by the Court of Appeals and with which so many are now familiar. Mr. Loomis and Mr. Vest returned home and on Saturday afternoon, October 5th, 1912 at the Court House at Independence made a full report of their treatment at Lexington. The suit was filed late Monday afternoon October 7, 1912 and if any "Trust Magnate had anything to do with its filing it was no other person than Mr. Clarence LeBus himself who on Friday before had in a high-handed and dictatorial manner arbitrarily turned from its office two small stockholders of the Burley Tobacco Co. representing themselves and other stockholders of Boone and Kenton counties, seeking as best they could to learn something of its workings.

Thus the suit of Stansifer vs. LeBus was started. Like many another fight for principle, it found support over the entire district and finally culminated in the opinion of the court of appeals recently handed down in which it is held that the present acting Board of Directors are usurpers in office and the right to vote their stock at corporate election is awarded to the stockholders.

Among other things the Court said:

"The wording of the pooling contract wherein each pooler agrees to subscribe to the capital stock of the proposed Burley Tobacco Company to the extent of 10 per cent of the gross sales of his pooled tobacco, can be construed to be nothing more than authority to the Burley Tobacco Society to pay for such stock out of the proceeds of such tobacco when sold. There is nothing in it which could be tortured into meaning, or from which it might be remotely inferred, that the pooler intended to in any way give up or relax his own control over the stock which he then agreed to buy; and the action of the Board of Directors of The Burley Tobacco Society thereafter in trying to take from them that right, was without semblance of authority, and upon its very face the most indefensible usurpation."

Immediately following that decision Mr. LeBus and his associates inaugerated and are now waging a vigorous campaign for control of the stock. It a ma-

AUTO RIDE

Of Three Thousand Miles By Marion Grubbs, Mr. and Mrs. P. P. Hunter.

Niagra Falls, July 16, 1913.

Leaving Boone Co. Ky., morning of June 25th, we crossed the Ohio river, dined at Queen City Club and took the trail for Washington C. H., Ohio.

Next morning we drove for Zanesville, and crossed Ohio river into Wheeling, West Va. Next morning we picked up Uncle Jeff Hunter, a Rebel veteran 70 years of age and struck State pike for Uniontown, Penn., arriving Saturday evening in time for a big evening dinner, having covered 117 miles of mountain road.

Sunday we were on the way to the foot hills of the Allagheny mountains at six a. m., Breakfast at the roadside at 8 a. m. We carry two thurmos bottles of hot coffee all the time.

The roads and crops were promisingly good—wheat very fine everywhere.

Between three and eight p. m. we crossed four ranges of the Allegheneys, the rise to one being four miles.

The scenery was equal to any in Europe with refreshing springs at the road side to quench your thirst and keep your engine cool

At dark we had reached the beautiful Bedford Springs Hotel in the valley. Here we rested for a day then proceeded over two more mountain ranges to the historical Chambersburg Pennsylvania, where they will celebrate July 5th next year—50 years anniversary of the destruction by fire, of Chambersburg.

Just at dusk June 30th, as we came over a rise, to the right, we saw a million lights in the great camp of Gettysburg, where our Government had established a camp at near 6,000 tents, twenty miles of street, a water works, sewerage and electric light plant

Uncle Sam was a generous host to the old Blue and Gray veterans providing 150,000 pounds of the choicest fresh beef each day, also great quantities of ham and mutton, bacon and choice vegetables

There were 400 army cooking ranges, 150 mess cook stations, each providing for about 350 veterans

Each day the army bakery turned out 50,000 large loaves of wholesome bread

President Wilson addressed the veterans July 4th, after which a chicken dinner was the change for the day and three car loads of ice cream were served to the 53,000 old soldiers of 1863

Night of the 4th a most wonderful display of fire works was given from Round Top mountain

The heat the first days was distressing to the Old Vets but a fine rain changed everybody's temper

Gettysburg is located in a thrifty, fertile valley, and the farmers get good results The population is about 7,000, and it crowded the situation beyond discription to take care of ten or fifteen thousand visitors, who could neither eat or sleep in the "Vets camp," so with a view to comfort we had quarters at Oxford Hotel, ten miles out, and found rest and cool nights

There are but two single track railroads leading to Gettysburg, and it must be said they handled fully 75,000 people in and out in four and five days Of course there were automobiles by the hundreds from states as far west as Nebraska and Dakota Our big brown car was the only one we noted from Daniel Boone's State

We motored east to Chester Springs, stopping three days with old friends, then on to Philadelphia, where we had a fine drive thru Fairmount Park, site of the 1876 Centennial Exposition, and up new River Park, then east to Trenton. N J., north thru Princeton, home of President Wilson and the home of Ex-President Grover Cleveland, passed the five mile lake donated by Andrew Carnegia to the Princeton colleges

We crossed the Hudson river at Fort Lee and the ferry landed us so we drove to Gen Grant's tomb in five minutes, and on down the beautiful Riverside drive for five miles into Central park and down Fifth Ave, to a hotel thirty stories high

We had to change our clothes here so as to mingle with high society Unfortunately Hettie Green was out of town

They would not sell us a thing in New York and third morning we pointed the auto up the beautiful Hudson river and fine roads Put up at night at Rinebeck, home of the original John Jacob Astor, who was a fur trader and laid the foundation of the great Astor fortunes trading in furs

We passed thru Albany, saw the fifteen million dollar State Capitol and run 175 miles thru the picturesque Mohawk Valley Water on the left all the way, and such fine State stone roads, so that we could speed 25 and 30 miles an hour.

Sunday we bent our course west thru Auburn and followed a chain of beautiful lakes for two days Cherries and berries were at their best, so were we Each meal better than the last

We passed many sections where new State roads were under construction They dig the bed 12 inches deep roll it, fill it with large rock, roll again, then put crushed rock on three inches deep, roll again, then coat with hot asphaltum and throw on fine crushed rock and with three foot earth at each side you have a road that stands three to six years without repairs, costing from $2,000 to $5,000 per mile, and the Eastern states have thousands of miles of high grade roads, and Ohio and Kentucky will soon be in line

From Rochester to Niagara Falls is 80 miles of State road like a parlor floor—No toll

Niagara, with all its beauty and grandeur still poure the rushing waters to the rapids below

At Buffalo we put the car on boat and after a refreshing sleep find ourselves in Cleveland, Ohio, ready for a 265 mile drive across the State of Ohio to the southwest corner, where the Suspension bridge helps us reach Boone Co Kentucky, agaain, after a charming drive of 2,304 miles thru six States, consuming 220 gallons of gasoline

Trips like this makes one feel like he would like to be Chief Road Supervisor so that he could build roads for the sniverse

Yours Cheerfully,
MARION GRUBBS

The average yield of the wheat crop is rather disappointing to the farmers, who thought the prospects some time ago were so flattering. Of the majority of the majority of the crops raised around here the average yield has been from sixteen to eighteen bushels. At 90 cents it will be seen that this was a very small return per acre for the land.—Bluegrass Clipper.

About twenty-five years ago Joe Freeman stuck a case knife into a black oak sapling which stood in his yard, on the farm in the Providence country. The knife was never disturbed. Today the knife is completely hidden and only a scar remains to show where the knife is, the sapling having grown to a tree three feet in diameter. Near the place an ax was placed in the fork of a white oak about twelve years ago. It is also completely hidden.—Dixon Journal.

Look out for the Rawleigh man. We are here again and will see you soon.

Special effort has been made by the management of the Fair Association to make this one of the best and biggest fairs in the history of said Association. All of the damage done by the recent flood has been repaired, the grounds have been cleaned of all rubbish, buildings have been rebuilt and the grounds now are in better shape than they have been for years. It would be impossible for the public to appreciate the work that has been done by the management of the Fair Association in repairing its grounds since the flood, the way to fully realize and appreciate the work that has been done is to come to the Lawrenceburg Fair, bring your family and your neighbor's family and any other family that you can get and spend a day at the Lawrenceburg Fair.

There will be plenty of seats and shade for every one and the grounds have been so arranged that there will be plenty of hitching room for all rigs and vehicles and parking places for automobiles and special attention will be given to the care of rigs, vehicles and automobiles.

You can't afford to miss the fair this year, if you do you will always regret it.

Reduced Parcel Post Rates.

The Postmaster General has announced a coming reduction in parcel post rates which should be of much interest to the public and to those who are engaged in mail order merchandising.

The changes, as explained in the Courier-Journal's Washington dispatches apply to the first and second zones. The maximum weight limit, which at present is eleven pounds, is raised to twenty pounds. The present rate for the first or "local zone is five cents for the first pound and one cent for each additional pound up to eleven pounds. The new rate in this zone will be five cents for the first pound and one cent for each additional two pounds up to twenty pounds. The present rate for the second zone, which embraces territory within a 150-mile air line radius, is six cents for the first pound and four cents for each additional pound up to eleven pounds. The new rate will be five cents for the first pound and one cent for each additional pound up to 20 pounds.

The new rates will become effective on August 15. It is expected that further reductions in other zones will be made later on. About one-third of all the parcel-post business, however, is done in the first two zones, and the changes to take effect next month are expected greatly to increase the use of the parcel post. The recent regulation which permits the use of ordinary stamps on packages, instead of the distinctive stamps at first required, will facilitate the parcel-post business and make it more popular with the masses.

The new Postmaster General is working along the right line for the development of this most important branch of the postal department. Parcel-post business already is growing at a rate which exceeds all estimates, and it will be stimulated to a marked degree by the reduction in rates.—Courier-Journal.

Better Farm Marketing.

The United States Department of Agriculture has established a "rural organization service" which is intended to aid farmers in the direction of a better marketing system.

The results of such a service will be to encourage organization which is necessary if the farmer is to prosper and "get what is coming to him." Farmers are more numerous than any other class, but, they, as a rule, do not co-operate to advantage. As Mr. Duke, of tobacco fame, remarked on a certain notable occasion, they "won't stick to together."

Through the lack of organization and the absence of a business system of marketing there is great economic waste. The fruit and truck growers in many parts of the country have solved the problem by the formation of associations. They sell their products in carload lots. They purchase their supplies in wholesale quantities. They do not ship their marketable stuff away on the hit or miss plan. The buyers come to them. The goods are delivered at the railway station and the money is paid. Obviously this is a much better way of doing business than by the old plan where the producer sent his products to a commission dealer in a distant city and could seldom be certain of realizing enough money to pay the expenses of shipment.

There are certain lines of agriculture endeavor which would be languishing today but for the stimulus they have received from improved methods of marketing. These methods, to be sure, are not perfect and they need to be extended, but they are necessary to agricultural prosperity and to prevent useless loss. Something is wrong when products go to waste on the farm while thousands of people in the cities are yearning for them, and this is no uncommon situation. With proper distribution the overproduction of any article of food in this country would be next to impossible, for population is increasing at a faster rate than farm production.

It is quite as essential that there should be better marketing as it is that there should be bigger production. In fact, it is more essential to the prosperity of the farmer.

The Right Kind of Booster.

Kentucky owes more to Mr. John B. McFarren than any other man in the State for the uprise in Kentucky for better schools. He has given his time and money to the cause of education and is as much interested in everything else that tends to advance the material interests of the State in general. He has not only contributed liberally for schools, for corn growers and other things, but it was his liberality that made the country Chautauqua possible in this county, he having contributed $1,000 for that purpose. If Kentucky had more McFarren's—more real boosters—things would forge to the front in all material particulars despite the knockers who are plentiful and too well supplied with hammers. Mr. McFarren is an old Warren county boy and it is natural that he should feel a deep interest in the county of his nativity, but many there are who feel an interest in things but when it comes to helping take it out in talk while Mr. McFarren not only talks intelligently, unloosens his purse strings and lets the money flow where it will do the most good.—Bowling Green News.

Several days ago some person handed the writer 35 cents to have the Weekly Enquirer sent to him. His name was forgotten before a note was made of it. Please send your name in so the matter can be attended to.

jority of the stockholders in interest with a full knowledge of the facts want Mr. LeBus and his associates elected, we will be satisfied.

As attorneys we have won for the stockholders the right to vote their stock which was taken from them in 1909. As stockholders, we expect to exercise that right. Personally we would like to see a new board of directors elected who would investigate the workings and doings of the old board, and make a full and complete report to the stockholders so that they may act intelligently concerning the future policy of the Company.

Before closing we desire to say in reference to the pending and former motion for a receiver that these motions were made on the idea that these usurping individuals should no longer be permitted to remain in active charge of the affairs of the Burley Tobacco Co. They are in our opinion drawing a salary from the money of the stockholders and are using their time and energy and possibly the funds of the stockholders in conducting a campaign for reelection rather than operation of the affairs of the Company. We believe that the affairs of the Company should be placed in impartial hands and remain there so long and only so long as there is no legal board of directors in existence, and as soon as a board of directors is elected by the stockholders it is proper for the court to dismiss the receiver and turn over the affairs to the newly elected directors whoever they may be. Neither of these motions was made on the idea of winding up the affairs and any effort to make the stockholders believe this is a fraud, but both motions were made as stated to place the affairs in impartial hands until such time as a proper board can take charge.

The suit of Stansifer vs. LeBus has been an unequal fight. On the one hand there have been sturdy stockholders fighting for principle. On the other hand trusted men placed in position of power and influence, have used the funds of the stockholders with which to fight them. But principle has prevailed and the stockholders are now their own masters, and the smallest stockholders has a voice in the management of the affairs of the Company proportionate to his interests. We do not arrogate to ourselves the credit for the victory for the stockholders. It is merely the triumph of "Right" which sooner or later prevails in all things.

With this statement of our position, we leave to the stockholders the election of a board of directors of their choice, that will take charge of the affairs and control the future destiny of the Burley Tobacco Company.

Haberdashing AT a Positive Saving of 50 Per Cent

Men Borrowing the Savings of Women.

In a recent court proceedings in a Kansas town, the judge warned women and girls against lending their savings to men borrowers. It is not alone in the Kansas towns that such things are practiced, and everywhere, girls and women are being robbed of their money through the habit of men borrowing of them, as they know they can not borrow of other men. Sums from a few cents well up into the hundreds of dollars are lost by the kind-hearted women and girls who have faith in the promises of their friends. It is said that such cases are not infrequent in the small debtors' courts, and the judge has warned the girls to quit lending to men, whether they know them intimately or not. Men who borrow of women seldom have any security; if they had, they could get any sum the security justified, but in borrowing of women, they offer no security, and they are not always anxious to pay back the principal. When a man comes down to borrowing small sums from women, whether he intends to pay it back, or not, it is, usually presumed that he does not, and it is time women learned to trust no man in even small money matters.

ABOUT CUTTING TOBACCO.

Mr. Editor,

Dear Sir.—Forty-eight years ago I began the work of growing tobacco. After a few years I decided, or rather discovered that there were certain days better than others for cutting tobacco in order for it to cure up nicely and have a "heavy body" and be oily and "waxy."

To explain, I'll say that tobacco has a sap just as a tree, and tobacco also has at intervals an oily substance, which is its natural possession. When the sap or water rises in tobacco it pushes out the oil through the pores of the leaves on the principle that oil and water won't mix, and tobacco cut in this state will be light and "chaffy," when cured. From the fact that sap pushes the oil out of tobacco is why it is so "gummy" at certain times and will barely stain your hands at other times.

But cut tobacco when full of oil and it will cure up nicely and have a "heavy body" and be oily and "waxy." When tobacco is full of oil and it cannot evaporate as sap does in curing, therefore the tobacco is compelled to be rich and heavy. Farmers have experienced cutting tobacco one week and do well with it, and then again the next week and off of the same piece of ground and have altogether different luck. If any of the farmers will write and send a stamp for reply, I'll be pleased to write to them upon this matter.

Yours Truly,
DANIEL V. DAVIS.

BASE BALL.

Erlanger 5; Burlington 3.

The above tells the result of the game of ball here last Saturday afternoon. Brady was in the box for Burlington and the visitors got next to him for an even dozen hits. Carter was knocked out of the box, his place being taken by Bentler, whose delivery was a puzzle to Burlington. There was some nice fielding done on the outer works, Bramlage's long run and catch of Conner's swipe that looked like it would be an easy homer, was the sensation of the game. Hits—off of Brady 12; Carter 9; Bentler 1. Struck out—Brady 9; Carter 2; Bentler 2.

The Burlington Kids were defeated by the Belleview Kids at Belleview, last Saturday 9 to 7.

The Belleview team has gotten in the habit of defeating every team with which it plays, and a great many, and among them is the Recorder, does not believe nine men can be picked in the county who can beat them.

A CARD.

I take this means of informing the voters that owing to the illness of my wife I have not been able for several days to give my canvass any attention and I may not, on that account, get away for several days more. I hope my friends will look after my istereats while I am detained at home.

J. S. ADAMS,
Candidate for Jailer.

A CARD.

To the Voters of Boone Co:

The reports that I will withdraw from the race for assessor; that I voted for John Young Brown; that I opposed the Society of Equity are each basely false. I will be in the race until the polls close at the primary.

W. C. JOHNSON.

Numerous delegations of politicians visit the capital of Boone county during Congressman A. B. Rouse's sojourn at home. Of course the audience sought is supposed to have as a main topic the placing of certain slices of official pie some of the visitors or their friends hope to be awarded.

Atty. Sidney Gaines has been building a free turnpike this week from his garage to the Petersburg pike. Automobiles create a desire as well as a necessity for good roads where they are used. If 1,000 were owned in Boone Co. good roads at an early day would be a certainty.

Buy it now. Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy is almost certain to be needed before the summer is over. Buy it now and be prepared for such an emergency. For sale by J. W. Berkshire & Son and E. E. Kelly.

The Ivorywood trading boat will be at the mouth of Garrison creek July 25 and 26; Petersburg, 28 and 29, Belleview 30; McVille, July 31. Will have a large stock of goods on board. Will buy rags, iron, &c. Give it a call.

F. M. Cleek and G. E. Powers, two of the Verona precincts prosperous and good citizens, were attending to business in Burlington, Tuesday. They report crops about Verona as looking well.

B. B. Hume sold a five passenger Ford auto to V. W. Gaines, of Idlewild neighborhood, last Tuesday. J. M. Eddins assisted Mr. Gaines to take it home.

Elder J. Harvey Dailey, of Green field, Ind., will preach at Salem, Saturday, July 26th, at 8 p. m., and Sunday the 27th at 11 a. m.

W. C. Johnson, candidate for assessor, was the guest of his son Samuel and family, last Saturday and Sunday.

The most destructive wind, hail and electrical storm that ever visited this section of the state swept across Scott county about 10:30 o'clock Saturday morning, leaving in its path the wreckage of scores of tobacco barns, unroofed houses, uprooted forest, shade and fruit trees, the destruction of hundreds of acres of corn and tobacco fields by the wind and hail. The storm struck Scott county at its Western boundary near White Sulphur and traveled directly east, covering a strip something like three miles wide from White Sulphur on the west to Newtown on the east—Georgetown News.

Mrs. Scott and R. B. Huey, of Commissary neighborhood, have had the appearance of their residences very much improved by the application of the painter's brush, Chester Tanner doing the work.

NOTICE DEMOCRATS

A civil service examination will be held in Covington on the 16th day of August for positions in the Internal Revenue Service. Applications should be made to the Commission in Washington on or before the 11th day of August.

This is a chance for Democrats to secure good positions as most all the offices are held by Republicans

For You and Your Wife

A cheerful, pretty bedroom will help you to start your day in a cheerful, pleasant mood. Its a haven of rest for you to come back to at night. And all day long its a pleasure to your wife.

To make a pretty bedroom it is more important to have tasteful furniture that harmonizes, than furniture that merely costs a lot. A brass bed, or a pretty iron bed if you prefer, dresser and chiffonier, a low rocking chair and one or two straight back chairs to match, a shirtwaist box, light colored rug on the floor,—all this does not cost very much, IF YOU BUY FROM US, and makes a truly pretty room. Come in and talk it over.

Don't forget to get a STEARNS & FOSTER mattress. That is what makes your bedroom a haven of rest. No other mattress is so comfortable.

Made in all grades of superiority; $9.00 upward. Windsor Grade at $13.50 is guaranteed SUPERIOR TO ANY OTHER ADVERTISED MATTRESS. We sell it on 60 nights trial. If you CAN part with it at the end of that time we will return your money without question or comment.

A treat for our readers that we have arranged for is a series of twelve illustrated articles on

The Panama Canal
and the
Isthmus in History and Romance

By Edward W. Pickard

Mr. Pickard is that type of globe-trotting author who seeks the quaint and curious places and people as subjects for his clever descriptive articles. In his present series of twelve articles which we have arranged to print, he has touched not only the actual work of building the canal, and the people who have accomplished it, but has gone into what the newspaper worker knows as the side lines, and which as a rule are of as much interest as the main story. This is particularly true in this case. After our readers have completed the last of Mr. Pickard's articles they will have a better understanding of the Panama Canal, and conditions within and surrounding the canal zone.

The weather the last several days has been delightful.

CELEBRATION IN LOUISVILLE

KENTUCKY METROPOLIS WILL COMMEMORATE INCIDENTS IN WAR OF 1812.

HUNDRED YEARS OF PEACE

Battles Which Kentuckians Won and Massacres in Which They Suffered Will Be Reproduced in Fireworks and Shams on Land and Water.

A week's celebration, which Louisvillians declare will be the greatest and most spectacular in the history of celebrations in America, will be held in the Kentucky metropolis for seven days, commencing September 29, and will be the climax of a series of celebrations held in a dozen lake cities, to commemorate the sufferings and victories of American arms in the War of 1812 as well as to focus attention on the achievements of a century of peace. The crucial and decisive engagement of the War of 1812 was the battle of the Thames, fought and won on Canadian soil October 5, 1813. The series of celebrations, which will be held in America will close in Louisville, October 5, 1913, and just one hundred years from the hour that Col. Richard M. Johnston, afterward Vice President of the United States, slew the Indian chief Tecumseh, President Woodrow Wilson will probably be addressing a crowd of 100,000 people in Louisville, the home of many of the troops who fought in the battle of the Thames.

Kentucky was assigned the closing and choice date of the celebration because of the distinguished part played by the Kentuckians in the War of 1812. Kentucky began to play her part in the generation before the war opened, when she sent Gen. George Rogers Clark and other Louisville soldiers into the hostile wilderness which they wrested from the French and Indians and out of which was afterward carved the great States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin and Michigan.

Kentucky was the last state which could have benefited from the war, inasmuch as it was brought about chiefly by the British impressment of American seamen, none of whom were Kentuckians, whereas should war prevail the unfriendly Indians on the frontier of the border states could be expected to commit atrocities from which Kentucky had already received the name "Dark and Bloody Ground." However, it was chiefly Henry Clay, in the Kentucky Congressional Delegation that forced President Madison to declare the second war with Great Britain, and Kentucky furnished forty per cent of her fighting population to go into that war, and at the close of the war of the listed dead more than eighty per cent were the names of Kentuckians. Kentucky troops to a man were massacred at the River Raisin and again at the first attack on Fort Meigs.

When the time came to man Perry's new-hewn ships, he selected Kentuckians unaccustomed to the motion of the lakes to mount into the insecure rigging and from that vantage point, with their practiced eye and unerring aim, fired down upon the British and won the battle of Lake Erie. Practically every officer and soldier in the battle of the Thames was a Kentuckian, excepting alone Gen. William Henry Harrison, who, however, held his commission as Major-General from the Kentucky legislature. The charge of the Forlorn Hope, about the briefest, most terrible and most heroic attack narrated in the annals of warfare, consisted exclusively of Kentucky soldiers when nineteen of them and their twenty horses went down to certain death. It was the Kentucky sharpshooters who are credited with having won the battle of New Orleans after the war had in reality closed.

Kentucky proposes to reproduce most of these scenes of the war of 1812 in the Louisville celebration. The battle of the Thames will be reproduced on land in Cherokee Park, topographically situated similar to the land on which was fought the battle of the Thames, and every detail of the sham battle will be as nearly historically correct as can be done. Louisville will take advantage of her magnificent river frontage in order to celebrate suitably the battle of Lake Erie. The actual battle will be depicted in a gorgeous entertainment of fireworks and all morning and all afternoon preceding the engagement there will be boat races, life saving feats and aquatic sports. A historical pageant, depicting various scenes of the war of 1812 will also include a magnificent floral parade, such as made Louisville famous a year ago, and will include civic and military parades many miles in length. Drills and exercises by 10,000 costumed school children will be held in the First Regiment Armory; a mammoth reception will be given to the descendents of Kentucky soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812, and a series of costumed balls will be given in their honor.

Exceedingly low railroad rates, probably as low as one cent per mile, from a distance of several hundred miles of Louisville, will be granted and efforts are being made to secure to other Kentucky points rates from Louisville for the week immediately following the celebration, to enable former Kentuckians who return home to visit the celebration, to visit also their old Kentucky homes.

DISEASE IS PREVENTABLE

OUT OF EVERY HUNDRED DEATHS IN KENTUCKY THIRTY-NINE ARE PREVENTABLE.

Most Diseases in Kentucky Caused by Consumption, Pneumonia, Typhoid Fever, Diphtheria, Measles, Smallpox or Gonorrhoea.

Lexington, Ky.—(Special.)—Out of every hundred deaths in the state of Kentucky thirty-nine are preventable, says the Kentucky Tuberculosis Commission. And what is a preventable disease? It is one which is directly or indirectly spread from one person suffering with it to others. We know what most of these diseases in Kentucky are, viz., consumption, pneumonia, typhoid fever, scarlet fever, diphtheria, malaria, whooping-cough, measles, smallpox, cerebro-spinal meningitis, syphilis, and gonorrhoea. Each of these diseases is caused by the growth in the body of a tiny organism, commonly called a germ. These germs can not be seen by the naked eye, but under the microscope the shapes, characteristics and habits of most of them have been studied, so that they are now as well known to physicians as are those of human beings or domestic animals. The eggs of hookworms are also transmitted from person to person, but in this case the full-grown organism can plainly be seen by the naked eye. Since we know how these diseases are transmitted, it is perfectly possible, when people aid the doctors, to prevent their spread.

INHERITED!

"He inherited consumption"! This is the way a great many people account for every case of the disease. If the parents did not have it, sometimes it is maintained that the disease was transmitted by inheritance from some more distant ancestor. This is all ndnsense. The new-born baby of consumptive parents is not affected with the disease. However, when a case of consumption in the family is being ignorantly or carelessly handled at home, it is perfectly possible for a little child to be infected at any time after birth. That, however, is not inheritance; a healthy adopted baby would suffer the same fate. It does not matter even if all of your relatives died of consumption, you need not necessarily travel the same dreary road. If you will live as much as possible in the open air, eat plenty of simple, well cooked foods, and no other, exercise, bathe and sleep regularly, and consult your physician as soon as you seem to be breaking down, there is no reason why you should die of consumption.

Kentucky Tuberculosis Commission.

FRESH AIR!

It's a lucky thing that God made so much fresh air; it does more for us than we ever imagine. Few things have such a destructive effect on most disease germs, after they leave the body, as a slow, steady draft of fresh air. For instance, the germs of consumption will be killed by it in less than twenty-four hours. Considering the number of people moving about and spreading the germs of consumption, it is lucky for us all that the fresh air keeps so steadily and effectively at work. Fresh air is also, by long odds, the most important factor in the cure of consumption. The steady breathing of fresh air twenty-four hours a day, regardless of the weather, will do more to produce a cure than any other single thing. The constant supply of fresh air, purging the body of impurties, keeps the machinery of the body literally in "good fighting trim," and, at the same time, slowly and surely kills the germs as cast off.

Kentucky Tuberculosis Commission.

FOOD!

The three things necessary to cure consumption, beyond the advice and supervision of the physician or nurse, are fresh air, rest and food. A patient must have fresh air twenty-four hours a day, and rest or exercise according to the orders of the doctor. The most important items in the diet are eggs and milk, because they contain a large proportion of easily digested nutriment. A few years ago, the doctors reasoned that if a little of this highly nutritious diet in small bulk was good, a lot would be better; and so, in many cases, the patients were stuffed until their stomachs did not work properly. Now, the question of diet is better understood; only so much of milk and eggs are given as the patient can easily digest. Of course, other foods are necessary, and are to be used in strict accordance with the doctor's orders. It is his business to know what things the patient can digest. A Pennsylvania consumptive, who tried to live largely on a diet of boiled ham and cabbage, experienced the natural result of a steady decline. Remember, then, if you are a consumptive, to follow the doctor's orders strictly in regard to the diet; and if he does not prescribe a considerable use of milk and eggs, go to another doctor.

MAKING the ZONE HEALTHFUL by

E. W. PICKARD

COLON HOSPITAL

Ancon, C. Z.—All the world gives to Col. W. C. Gorgas, chief sanitary officer, and his assistants full credit for the wonderful work they have accomplished in making the Panama canal zone healthful and keeping it so. All the world that knows gives equal if greater credit to those American, Italian and English doctors and soldiers who sacrificed their health and in some cases their lives to prove that yellow fever and malaria, the two terrors of tropic America, are transmitted by the bite of mosquitoes. It is not my intention to tell over again the latter story. The devotion of those brave men actually made possible the building of the Panama canal, for their work has been taken full advantage of by Colonel Gorgas and his forces, and the zone is now one of the most healthful places in the world.

Before the coming of the Americans the isthmus was a veritable pest hole. The French canal builders and their workmen and the laborers on the Panama railway died like flies, usually of malaria or yellow fever. Today a fatal case of malaria is a rarity, the more malignant form being almost unknown, and not a single case of yellow fever has originated in the zone in several years.

The Stegomyia mosquito, the yellow fever bearer, has not been exceedingly hard to exterminate because it breeds and lives only near human habitations. When the Americans had substituted a regular water system and underground sewers for the rain water barrels and the open ditches in Colon, Panama and the other towns, and had fumigated all the dwellings, Stegomyia was practically extinct. That job of fumigating, by the way, raised a great row among the ignorant inhabitants of Panama. They could not understand why they should be all moved out into the street and their houses filled with evil-smelling fumes, and they were inclined to offer forcible resistance until the zone police took the matter in hand.

Ancon Hill.

Much more difficult has been the task of eradicating malaria, for the Anopheline mosquito, which makes a specialty of carrying this disease, is widespread and of several varieties. It is the female only that bites, and she needs blood—preferably red blood—for the development of her eggs. The eggs are deposited in a slow moving or stationary water and hatch out into little larvae or "wrigglers." At least once in two minutes the larva must come to the surface to breathe, and that is where the sanitary department gets it, usually.

As one wanders about the zone he sees at the headwaters of every stream, ditch or other water course, at frequent intervals along its banks, and at the edge of every pool, a big tin can or a keg. From this receptacle there is a constant drip, drip, drip of larvacide, a black, oily-looking compound of crude carbolic acid, caustic soda and resin. This spreads out over the water, an iridescent film, and when little Anopheline larva comes up for air he meets a swift death. To replenish these cans of larvacide a small army of Jamaicans is kept traveling about the zone, and others go around with tanks of the compound strapped on their backs, spraying every pool they come to.

Another measure of extermination has been the draining and filling in of swampy ground and the straightening and clearing of water courses so that their flow will be too swift for Madame Anopheline. The work of draining and filling has been extensive and near the Pacific end of the canal has resulted in the reclamation of large tracts of land for building sites.

The third part of the anti-mosquito campaign is the careful screening of buildings occupied by human beings. Ordinary mosquito netting would not do and only copper wire will stand the climate there. Consequently a fine meshed copper screening is used. If any Anophelines escape the larvacide and succeed in gaining entrance to a habitation, the mosquito-killers are summoned and seldom fail to get them. Nine days must elapse after a mosquito has bitten a malarious person before it becomes infectious, and this gives the mosquito brigade plenty of time to kill the insects while they are asleep on the walls. The isolation of infected persons in the hospitals helps a lot, for of course the mosquito cannot carry malaria until it has bitten a malarious person.

Rats, that carry the bubonic plague, and flies, that transmit various other diseases, have received adequate attention from the sanitary department, and dumb brutes are not neglected. As an instance of the latter fact, every horse and mule in the zone must be placed at night in one of a series of corrals established by the department and there it is fed and cared for, the owner paying a reasonable fixed charge for the service. These animals, if left out, often are attacked by a disease that is infectious and may be transmitted to human beings. Besides that, the native cannot be persuaded to keep his stable in sanitary condition.

Many other sanitary regulations are imposed on the people of the isthmus. All garbage must be deposited in receptacles to be collected by the department's wagons and burned in its crematories. Chickens may not be kept within a certain distance of any dwelling. Rain water may not be gathered and kept in open receptacles. That last rule is not easy to enforce, for the Panamanian prefers rain water for drinking purposes. But all these are for the general good, and the United States has the treaty right to attend to the sanitation of Panama and Colon as well as of the zone.

In addition to the two great hospitals at Ancon and Colon, the department of sanitation maintains a dispensary with physician and nurse at every town along the route of the canal and at Porto Bello, where the commission has a big stone quarry. The larger hospital, on Ancon hill, close to Panama, in the spring of the year had about 900 patients. Its wards and the residences of the physicians and nurses are scattered picturesquely though rather inconveniently on the east and north slopes of the beautiful hill, and the grounds are filled with magnificent trees and lovely flowering vines and bushes. A little further around the hill is the hospital for the insane, and it, too, is well filled, for the Jamaican and Barbadian negroes go crazy at the slightest provocation.

In Colon, stretching along the seashore in the only pretty part of that flat city, is the other hospital, smaller but no less efficient and well manned than that at Ancon. Its grounds are swept continually by the refreshing winds from the Atlantic and many of its wards are built out over the water. Both hospitals are served by corps of physicians and surgeons, mostly rather young, but able, ambitious and studious.

One mighty good thing the French company did was to establish a sanitarium on Taboga island, and the Americans, recognising its value, promptly reopened it for the benefit of white convalescents. These may remain on the pretty island for two weeks, paying $2 a day for room, board and medical attention.

Taboga lies twelve miles due south of Panama and is as attractive a tropical isle as one will often see. Its carving white beaches in little bays are ideal bathing places; its lofty hills, clad with dense vegetation, afford occupation for the climber, and the small fishing village of Taboga is ancient and not uninteresting. Gorgeous birds and flowers and luscious fruits are everywhere. Nothing more perfectly beautiful can be imagined than an evening on the grassy slopes of the sanitarium grounds. A myriad stars glitter overhead, the Southern Cross and Canopus swinging above the southern horizon. In the forest night birds sing and a variety of tree locust sends forth a clear, musical note that can be heard a mile. In the little public square of the village the native women and children are laughing and singing as the men set forth on all-night fishing trips. And off to the north, this side of the glow of Panama, wink the light buoys of the canal's sea channel.

If in later years Taboga does not become a favorite winter resort for wealthy Americans, I shall miss my guess.

Everett K. Stephens received the sad intelligence last Thursday of the sudden death of his brother Clarence E. Stephens at Columbus, Ohio, who was suddenly stricken with heart failure. He was in the employ of the Big Four Railroad Company as conductor of a freight train running out of Columbus. Mr. Stephens was 39 years old and leaves a widow but no children. He was a most genial, clever gentleman, and had a host of friends everywhere and particularly at Walton, his boyhood's home. Mr. and Mrs. E. K Stephens left immediately for Columbus on receipt of the sad news, and brought the remains here Sunday when they were laid to rest in the Baptist cemetery alongside of those of his mother and sister. The many friends here extend their heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved ones in their great sorrow. The remains were brought here last Sunday at 3:25 p. m. They were taken to the Baptist church to where they were followed by a large number of sorrowing relatives and sympathetic friends, Rev. H. C. Wayman delivered a very appropriate discoures over the remains, after which they were interred in the cemetery there. The floral tributes were beautiful and numerous, attesting the high esteem in which the deceased was held by all who knew him. Those from a distance who attended the funeral were Mrs. C. E. Stephens, the widow of the deceased, Mrs. T. Miranda, mother of Mrs. Stephens, Thos. and Dorothea Neal, John Boland and John Deck, Columbus, Ohio; Mrs. Al Lane, Cincinnati.

SPECIAL NOTICE

To My Friends and Patrons and The Public at Large.

I have perfected a system for repairing Buggies and Vehicles of all kinds whereby the work is better than ever, wearing longer, holding the luster just twice as long as the usual way of repairing. Another great advantage whereby it is far ahead of the old way is that I use no water on any part of the body or gear until the job is in the last coat of rubbing varnish, and by that time I have all parts of the body well protected, where in doing work the old way we rub with a rubbing stone out of water, called Filler, thereby letting the water get between the pannel of the body and the sill, loosening the plugs, rusting the screws and causing plugs to come out. That is why your pannels break in corners and come loose—water gets in and destroys the glue, letting the water stand there by rotting the wood.

Recollect I have been in the Carriage Business for 35 years, and have made it a life study. I have been working on my Dry System for the last four years and now have it perfected. While there is more work attached to my system and material is more in cost, my price for a Buggy still remains the same—$12.00 for a first-class job of painting and guaranteed to be such. If you want something cheaper in painting I will do it for you but at you risk.

Kelly Rubber Tires.

I have just bought a full supply of the Kelly Springfield Rubber Tires and am prepared to supply your wants at a moment's notice. I have 3,000 pounds now ready to put on while you wait for them at prices to suit everybody that wants a high-grade tire for just the same money they pay other people for a cheap grade. Of course you know I am prepared to do anything for you in the carriage maker's line. Come and see me and get prices and I'll assure you you will go home convinced you have been treated alright.

N. B.—I guarantee the Kelly Tire to be first quality—not second or third grade, and wear twice as long as anyother make of tire.

Yours respectfully,

H. G. COLLINS, Erlanger, Ky.

DINE'S SPECIAL

BRASS BED OFFER

INCLUDING SPRING AND MATTRESS

—$29.60—

You'll like this bed

For it is this season's latest style, an exclusive pattern, entirely different from any you ever saw before. The extreme height of head gives it a most magnificent appearance and its most beautiful mounts and trimmings also add to its charms. We selected this particular pattern from the line of the largest brass bed factory in the country, their designs are acknowledged the handsomest on the market, and we do not think that we made a mistake with our selection, and you will unhesitatingly admit that it is a real beauty.

This bed is built right

Besides being the largest Brass Bed Factory this factory is also the oldest; their reputation for excellent bed building is unsurpassed. Every point has been carefully looked after in making this bed perfect; every filler is securely fastened, every mount is carefully adjusted, in fact, it is just so in every detail, assuring a lifetime service. The locks are so fitted, that it is an utter impossibility for either of the ends leaning, which is a very common fault with most beds.

This bed wont tarnish

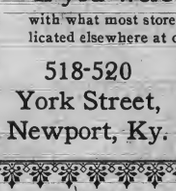
We've told you about the extreme beauty of this bed, and its excellent construction; now we want to mention about the lacquer. The lacquer is the finish on the bed, and it is this which you should inquire mostly into when you make a bed purchase. This bed is finished with the Hickson Process Lacquer, the only Insured Lacquer in the World, carrying with it an Indemnity Policy For Five Years, the factory agreeing to make good any bed which may prove defective within that period. The superiority of this lacquer has been demonstrated through various chemical tests without any harmful effects. Fly specks, perspiration, hard rubbing and other causes which generally tarnish beds of common lacquer will in no way injure the beautiful Hickson Process Lacquer

The usual care required in the cleaning of most brass beds does not have to be applied in the care of this bed. It may be washed with soap and water. We can furnish it in either polished or satin finish.

$29.60 is the price

including spring and mattress

The price we quote for this entire outfit would be reasonable for the bed alone, but to make this one great, big value we are including a heavy, sanitary steel spring, which we guarantee against sagging, and a 45-pound mattress, made in compliance with sanitary bedding laws.



If you were to compare this outfit

with what most stores offer you, you will readily agree with us that it cannot be duplicated elsewhere at our price.

Miss Anna Cowen Dies.

Miss Annie Cowen, after an illness of several days died of heart failure last Thursday about 7:00 p. m. She was born July 4, 1850, consequently she was 63 years and 20 days of age. She was a daughter of the late Samuel and Maria Cowen, and was born in a house that occupied a site at the top of the hill immediately southeast of Burlington. She is survived by three brothers—R. S. Cowen, of Burlington; James A. Cowen, of Gallatin county, and Dr. L. C. Cowen, of Rising Sun, and one-half brother and two half sisters—Thomas Cowen, of Memphis, Tenn., and Mrs. Laura Martin and Miss Pinkie Cowen, both of the latter of Burlington.

Miss Annie Cowen was one of Burlington's oldest native citizens, and was held in the very highest esteem by everyone. She was devoted to her home and the duties thereof and was noted for her industry and frugality, and was ready at all times to sacrifice her own comfort to contribute to the pleasures of those about her, and in her fatal illness she was afraid that she was causing the members of the family too much trouble, while they were ministering to her needs in a most loving manner.

Miss Annie was the oldest of the three sisters who composed the family, and her death causes a vacancy not to be supplied, as her timely and ever correct counsel and advice in domestic affairs were sought by her sisters.

The deceased was a member of the Christian church with which she united many years ago, and a short service at the grave was conducted by the local pastor Rev. Edgar C. Riley, last Sunday at 10 a. m., the remains were consigned to their last resting place in the family lot in the cemetery north of town, when those composing the large procession of sorrowing friends and relatives of the noble lady, bowing in humbie submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well, returned to their homes, it is hoped, to profit by the many good examples with which the life of the departed one was fraught.

The funeral was in charge of Scott Chambers, of Walton, and the following were the pall-bearers: Timothy Westbay, C. C. Roberts, A. B. Renaker, F. A. Hall, Geo. Biyth, W. L. Riddell. Among those from a distance attending the funeral were Mr. and Mrs. B. B. Allphin, Miss Lula Bolington and Mrs. Fanny Adams, of Walton; Mr. and Mrs. Timothy Westbay, of Covington; Mrs. Susie Parish and daughter, Mrs. Chas. Gurney, of Erlanger; Mr. Byron Bryan; Mr. and Mrs. Emil Roessler Samuel Cowen and wife, of Cincinnati; Mrs. Robert Wilson, of Rabbit Hash; Miss Anna Gurney, of Erlanger.

EXERCISE!

A person leading a quiet, sedentary life is healthy only by accident, unless he makes up for by a little vigorous, open air exercise. Cram a locomotive fire-box with coal, without removing the cinders, and the engine will become so clogged as not to work properly. The body is exactly like a locomotive; if it is not exercised, the waste products accumulate and the result is disease. Moreover, judicious exercise shakes up the organs of the body and increases their activity; it keeps the muscles in condition to meet the extraordinary emergencies which may come to any of us; and, if taken heartily, diverts the mind from its ordinary cares and lets a man return with new vigor and refreshed spirits to his tasks.

Ninety per cent of the women who bother the doctors with all sorts of more or less vague complaints, need nothing but a loose dress, a hoe and a garden.

SUNSHINE!

The Italians have a saying, "Where the sunlight is shut out, the doctor is let in." Fire, steam and a few powerful chemicals are the only things that will kill disease germs as quickly as sunlight. The germ in the spit of a consumptive, exposed to the glare of the July sun for an hour or two, are dead or harmless. Nor is the sunshine any more friendly to the other tiny enemies of mankind. Consequently, leave your windows and shutters open for the fresh air and sunshine several hours every day. If you are afraid it is going to fade the carpet, take up the carpet. Bare floors are cleaner and consequently more healthful any way. Instead of carpets use rugs and frequently expose them to the fresh air and sunshine. Give the fresh air and sunshine as much access to your whole body as possible. Exercise out of doors daily, with garments no heavier than necessary. The fresh air and sunshine, as well as the exercise, will stimulate the action of the skin in throwing off the waste products of the body.

PLACARDED!

When the physicians says "Scarlet Fever!" or "Diphtheria!" and a colored card is put on your front door, and you are not allowed to go out, and only the doctor can go back and forth, don't think that all this disturbance is useless, and intended simply to fill the pocketbooks of the doctors. These germ diseases are spread in ways so infinitely delicate that it is hard for us to understand them. More often than not too little rather than too much care is exercised. If the bowel discharges of a typhoid patient are not thoroughly disinfected by formaldehyde, quicklime, or other powerful chemicals before being thrown out, it is perfectly possible for the germs to be carried in water under ground, or by flies through the air, for a long distance, to infect other people. The germs of scarlet fever may live in the clothes of the victims and months later infect the person who chances to handle them. When the doctors' precautions bother you, remember that the ignorance, carelessness or obstinacy of some one else is responsible for the disease in your family, and co-operate with your doctor!

Kentucky Tuberculosis Commission.

THE LAST OF THE FAMILY.

Out of thirty-two members of three generations of this rural Kentucky family, this one survives. At least sixteen died of consumption, all in the same house. There was no money to give them adequate care. A county tuberculosis hospital, which could have cared for the first cases and prevented the infection of the others, might have saved several lives in this one family.

HEALTH EXHIBIT CAR, KENTUCKY TUBERCULOSIS COMMISSION

This car has been equipped with an exhibit to instruct the public regarding the spread, cure and prevention of consumption. It will cover first the L. & N. lines in the State. Admission is free; and numerous free illustrated lectures will be given evenings in outside halls.

DISINFECT!

When the doctor tells you to disinfect after the recovery or death of a member of your household, do exactly as he tells you. He knows what is best, and you don't. For instance, you may believe that burning a little sulphur in the room will destroy the germs; as a matter of fact, it will probably not even kill the bedbugs. Formaldehyde is by far the best disinfectant for most purposes. But formaldehyde gas does not penetrate. Germs lodged in mattresses, feather beds, heavy bed clothing, books, carpets, wall paper, and similar things are not in the least affected. Everything in the room should be opened up as much as possible. Heavy blankets and similar things should be boiled for an hour. Especially after consumption, bedding, mattresses and upholstered furniture ought to be burned. After the fumigation, all the woodwork should be carefully washed with hot, soapy water and then wiped off with a cloth wet with some disinfecting solution. Then a room ought to be left unoccupied for a couple of days, if possible, with the windows wide open; for, after all, sunlight and fresh air are the best disinfectants.

Kentucky Tuberculosis Commission.

DIAGNOSIS!

If you suspect that you have consumption go at once to your physician to be diagnosed. Don't delay! Every day lost decreases the chance of cure. And go to the best physician. Even the best physicians can not immediately distinguish tuberculosis in its first stages from other troubles. Expect your physician to take a sample of your spit, which can be examined free of charge in the laboratory of the State Board of Health. If germs of tuberculosis are found, that is absolute proof that the disease is present even though you can see no outward signs of its inroads. If they are not found, you may nevertheless have tuberculosis; in the early stages of the disease more often than not the germs will not be found in the sputum. Expect your physician also to make a careful physical examination of the trunk of your body from the waist line to the neck. It will take him a full half hour to do it thoroughly and, if he requests it, the patient must be stripped to the waist line.

SYMPTOMS!

Not one person in fifty knows accurately the symptoms of beginning consumption. The doctor can detect some things which the layman can not; but the following signs anyone can notice. The commonest symptom is a continual cough, either a few spasms of coughing each day or a little hacking cough at intervals all day long. A slight feverish condition between one and seven o'clock in the afternoon, generally about 4 o'clock, and sometimes lasting only a half hour, is another common sign. If a person has both the cough and the fever the trouble is almost surely tuberculosis, especially if combined with a steady loss of weight; a gradual loss of appetite; a feeling of being continually tired or lack of interest in life, or night sweats, the other common signs of beginning consumption. Any one of these persisting for some weeks should cause the person concern and send him to the doctor. Don't delay. Delay is dangerous! Find out what ails you! Everything can be gained and nothing can be lost by knowing whether or not your affliction is tuberculosis.

Kentucky Tuberculosis Commission.

MEDICAL BOOKS!

Probably at some time or other, a smooth book agent has tried to sell you "a doctor book." Generally it is a big, heavy volume, with the names of physicians in distant cities on the title page, and a big, heavy price set on it. The agent will tell you that by a little study of its pages, you can always tell just what ails you, just what medicines to get at the drug store, and just what doses to take. So you will save all doctors' bills. If you buy the book, you put yourself among that class of fools from whom the sharpers of the world make a rich and easy living.

MEDICINE!

Most of us place all together too much faith in medicine. Of all the hundreds of known diseases, very few can, in every instance, be cured by any single kind of medicine. Sometimes one person, suffering with a given disease, will not be affected, or may even be harmed by a medicine which has been given with good effects to another person. Most diseases are the result of self-indulgence, or carelessness, or ignorance, and nearly all of the sure cures, where cures are possible, are provided by nature. This is especially true in the case of consumption. There are some few cases that are benefited by medicine, but no medicine can yield a cure, or even a considerable improvement, unless it co-operates with the forces of nature. There are quantities of medicine sold in the stores and advertised in every conceivable way, as cures for tuberculosis. Most of them actually injure the person who takes them; because most of them contain opiates or other harmful drugs. Every one of these "consumption cures" is planned simply to enrich the manufacturer at the expense of the most helpless people in the world. If your doctor is unable to give you medicine to cure you, don't think you can pass the druggist 50 cents or $5.00, and cure yourself.

Kentucky Tuberculosis Commission.

VISITING NURSES!

A visiting nurse is a trained nurse with a special experience, supported by the city, or county, or some charitable organization, who devotes her time to visiting the sick, giving them advice, and such assistance or service as she can render in a short time. Of course, a visiting nurse is unable to attend cases of such highly infectious diseases as scarlet fever in the course of her regular duties. She is under the orders of the physician and is not allowed to make diagnoses. One such nurse can relieve a great deal of distress; but it is rather a harder task to prevent disease than to cure it. When, for instance, she goes to look after one case of consumption in a family, she watches the other members of the household carefully in order to see whether or not there are others just coming down with the disease. She visits patients during the period of convalescence to guard against a relapse or the catching of some other disease. She educates the families of her patients regarding what to do for the patient and how to take care of themselves so as to avoid the same disease. There are at present few visiting nurses in Kentucky. Wouldn't you like to have one in your community? Wouldn't it be worth a little of your money every month for her support?

BATH TUBS!

Keep on friendly terms with your bath tub. It is the business of the skin to pass off to the surface of the body some of the waste products. In the process of hard manual work or violent exercises unusual large amounts of waste products are made, and the sweat carries them off with greater rapidity. The action of the breeze and the rubbing of the clothes remove some of this waste, but it can not be thoroughly done except with water. A warm bath with the use of a little soap once a week is the minimum with which the skin can do its best work. Baths can well be taken more frequently, especially if one takes a great deal of exercise. Quick baths in cold water without the use of soap toughens the body and makes one less liable to have colds. However, such baths do not give the skin a thorough cleansing, and ought not to be taken by very delicate, sensitive people except under the recommendation of a physician. Baths not only cleanse the skin, but they also start the blood to moving faster. It is known also that they have a marked effect on the nervous system. People who are exceedingly nervous or insane can be more easily and surely quieted by properly administered baths than in any other way. For continuous mental and physical health a bath a day is an excellent rule. Teach this to your children!

Here's The Plumb Bob

It's just another proof that Tubular Cream Separators are just up to the minute—miles ahead of anyother. No other machine has it.

What's It For?

It enables you to level the Sharples Dairy Tubular Cream Separator in a minute—quicker than you could find the spirit level you must use to level all other separators. A glance at the plumb bob, hanging there on the back of the Tubular, will always tell you whether the Tubular remains level. In that way you get the very best work out of the Tubular, for all Separators should be kept level to do their best work.

Tubulars have dozens of exclusive fine points and are sold on the level. Bring the wife in. See how simple, perfect and different from others Tubulars are.

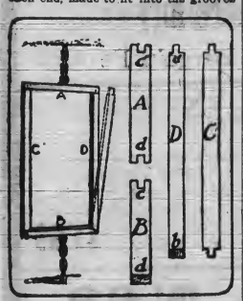
DAIRY



MAKING A SWING STANCHION

Illustration and Directions Given for Putting Together Device for Use in Dairy Barn.

Take four pieces of 2x4. Two must be 4½ feet long, one 1½ feet and one 1 foot 2 inches. Cut one of the pieces as shown by A, making the notches c and d about 1 inch wide and 2 inches deep. Cut the other short piece as shown by B. The notch at c is the same as on A, but at d the 2x4 is beveled and is finally attached to the upright with a hinge, writes Lyle A. Myers of Muskegon county, Mich., in the Farm and Home.

One of the long pieces must be cut as shown by C with the tongues at each end, made to fit into the grooves on A and B. The other long piece must be cut as shown by D with a tongue at a and bevel at b to fit into the bevel at d on piece B.

These pieces are put together as shown, and the cow is fastened in the stanchion by closing the piece D. This has a hole in the tongue which comes opposite a hole in A through which a nail is inserted to hold the stanchion shut.

SELECTING THE DAIRY SIRE

Demand for Stock That Will Improve Herd Is What Has Made Advanced Registry So Popular.

On every large farm where a herd of dairy cattle is kept, the question of selecting the dairy sire is one of constant recurrence. A bull may be kept in a herd for a few years, and then there is a necessity to supplant him with other blood, especially if his daughters are maintained in the breeding herd.

The breeder who is constantly trying to improve his cattle and increase the productive capacity of the herd, says Kimball's Dairy Farmer, is always anxious to get a little better stock with each succeeding purchase. If he has handled his cattle so as to make creditable records the search must be more far-reaching, and the ease with which a bull suitable to head the herd may be found will not be so great.

The demand for stock that will constantly improve the herd is what has made the advanced registry work of the various associations so popular. These official records are the index to the desirability of families and breeding, and it is only through following up the work that has been done by a certain strain that a definite knowledge of what may be expected from a bull is available. By its use it is possible to keep increasing the yield of milk and butter fat; if it is ignored one is groping in the dark.

Selecting a sire is most important and should have the careful attention of every thoughtful dairyman. Such a bull should be chosen as will make it possible for the heifers to do just a little better than their dams have done, and also such a bull as will keep up the type of the herd.

ATTENTION NEEDED BY COW

Previous to Calving Animal Should Be Placed in Comfortable and Well-Littered Stall.

(By T. L. HAECKER.)

For ten days preceding the time for calving, the cow should be kept in a comfortable, well-littered box stall or pen, in which there is no manger. The feed should be given in a box or basket, which should be removed after the feed is taken. The coarse feed may be put in the corner, and no more should be given than she will eat. This rule should be observed, not only before calving, but at all times. Throwing large quantities of roughage before a cow leads her into the bad habit of eating only the most appetising parts and so wasting much feed. It is a good practice to take a lantern and go the rounds of the barn, before retiring for the night, to see that everything is as it should be.

Produce Rich Milk.

Cows fed upon silage will produce as rich milk as those fed upon other kinds of feeds.

KENTUCKIANS' HOME-COMING

ONE MILLION FORMER RESIDENTS INVITED TO ATTEND GREAT CELEBRATION.

RAILROADS OFFER LOW RATES

Perry's Victory on Lake Erie, Battle of Thames and Massacre of River Raisin To Be Reproduced in Fireworks and Sham Battles.

One million expatriated Kentuckians and their children, even to the fourth and fifth generations, have been invited to return to Louisville to participate in the Perry's Victory Centennial Celebration, to be held in that city seven days, beginning September 29. Those particularly invited are the descendants of Kentucky soldiers and sailors of the War of 1812, and it is estimated that 75 per cent of native born Kentuckians and the descendants of those born in Kentucky in the past century are eligible to participate in such a celebration. Approximately one million people now living in other states are included in the "list of those invited."

The purpose of the Louisville celebration is to commemorate not only Perry's victory on Lake Erie but all other events of the war of 1812. However, in particular honor of Commodore Perry a special attraction in the Louisville celebration will be the reunion of the Perry family, regardless of kinship. Everybody by the name of "Perry" will be invited to this special entertainment and those who expect to attend are requested to notify Edwin Perry at the Louisville headquarters.

GOVERNOR ISAAC SHELBY, OF KENTUCKY

Who in person led the victorious forces in the Battle of the Thames.

The Kentucky Association, which has in charge the Louisville celebration, has given an order for a quarter of a million ancestry certificates to be handsomely engaved, and which will be filled in and given away as souvenirs to descendants of Kentucky soldiers and sailors of the War of 1812.

Another entertainment in their honor will be a mammoth reception, at which refreshments will be served and opportunity provided for public addresses. For the few remaining actual sons and daughters a banquet will be given. A great ball will be given in the First Regiment Armory, which has a capacity of 20,000 for them.

Forty per cent of the white male population of Kentucky engaged in the War of 1812, consequently forty per cent of the succeeding generation were really sons and daughters of that war, and, estimating that one-half of them intermarried with families which did not participate in the war, sixty per cent of the third generation were grandchildren of the war, and in similar manner at least seventy-five per cent and probably as high as ninety per cent of the fourth and incoming fifth generations are descendants of Kentuckians who fought in that war.

It is estimated that in the state of Kentucky alone one million men, women and children are eligible to participate in the proposed reunion, and it is estimated that another million now living outside of Kentucky are eligible to participate.

During the week of the celebration in Louisville spectacular free events, including features on a mammoth scale not heretofore given with any American celebration, will be provided every afternoon and evening. Pilgrimages to notable historic scenes of interest may be made in the mornings. In addition to free attractions there will be scores of the highest priced amusement concessions that can be secured on the American continent.

The railroads in a radius of 500 miles of Louisville have been asked to make a rate for the celebration week and immediately preceding and following that week of one cent a mile. Railroads running out of Louisville probably will give low rates to other points in Kentucky, so that former Kentuckians who live a great distance can visit their old homes as well as attend the Louisville celebration.

Local committees are preparing an 1812 museum, in which they solicit the loan of any souvenir or relic of the War of 1812, providing the transportation at their expense, and guaranteeing that articles loaned for the week will be returned to owners. This museum for the time being will undoubtedly be the most valuable collection in America.

One of the advantages in driving an automobile is you don't have to reach over the dashboard and lift its tail to get the lines out.—Cynthiana Democrat.

That G. Washington Incident.

Small William, aged three, and John, aged five, had taken special interest in the approach of Washington's birthday. Fond grandparents and other relatives had been sending them many cherry-tree and hatchet post cards.

Of course the lads' mother had to explain the meaning of the different post cards. She tried to impress upon her sons also the lesson about the "Father of Our Country" never telling a lie.

Several nights before the natal day of the much celebrated and greatly lamented American, another consignment of post cards was received by the two boys. They were presented to their mother at the dinner table that evening to get her to tell of their significance.

Among this last list of cards receiver were several showing the chopped cherry tree. "And George Washington could not tell a lie," said the devoted parent, as she finished relating the much heralded incident.

Master William was silent for a moment, and then, in all seriousness, said:

"Why, mo'ver, what was the matter wif 'im?"

Time to Kick.

There was an excitement in the old inn at the cross roads. The ancient proprietor was bristling up like an angry porcupine.

"It's got to stop!" he thundered, as he brought his fist down on the ink-spattered register. "Be gosh, it's got to stop, or I'll close up the hotel!"

"What's the trouble?" asked the coffee drummer.

"Trouble enough. I could stand those sleep-walking motorists crawling under the bed and hammering on the springs, 'cause they thought they were under an automobile, but I'll be blowed if I am going to put up with dreaming aviators climbing up in the ceiling and knocking all the plastering down, lest 'cause they imagine they are tinkering with their flying machines. No, siree. It's got to stop."

Little Bit of Irony.

Louis J. Horowitz is noted in New York for his trenchant wit. Thus, in the discussion of a recent contract, certain rather niggardly proposals were made to him, and Mr. Horowitz rebuked their niggardliness with the quiet words:

"Only so much for a fifteen-story building? Come, gentlemen, make it $5 more and we'll run you up a skyscraper that will overtop the highest."

What the Old Graveyards Show.

"Mother" in the good old days, it is true, used to make the family clothes, work the family loom, raise the family chickens, plant the family garden, cook the family food, churn the family butter, embroider the family frocks and bear the family grief; but "mother" in those days used to die at an early enough age to make it possible for "the man of the family" to take unto himself another wife, and sometimes a third and a fourth. If there is anything that the old graveyards show it is that the "mothers" lived hard while they did live, but seldom lived long. That "mother" today only does about twice as much work as her husband—we are speaking of the average "mother"— is the reason, an investigator avers, why the race is degenerate. We do not think that the race is degenerate, but it were better that it were degenerate than that "mother" should be a packhorse.—Exchange.

PROCLAMATION.

It appearing that there is a vacancy in the office of Circuit Clerk in Boone County Kentucky, caused by the resignation of J. A. Duncan, the regularly elected clerk, and said vacancy existing three months before the next regular election, at which county officers may be elected for the the year nineteen hundred and thirteen, an election is now ordered to be held in Boone county on the regular election day, for the purpose of electing a clerk to fill said vacancy; and the sheriff of Boone county is now ordered to call said election, and give proper notice thereof by publication as required by law, and to cause the polls to be opened for that purpose.

Given under my hand this 19th day of April, 1913.

J. W. CAMMACK.
Judge of Boone Circuit Court and Fifteenth Judicial District of Kentucky.

Copy Attest.—
CHAS. MAURER, Clerk.

In pursuance of the above order I hereby call an election to fill the vacancy in the office of circuit clerk, which election will be held Tuesday, Nov. 4, 1913.

To The Democratic Voters

Fifteenth Judicial District of Kentucky.

Statement of Martin L. Downs.

For nine months under appointment from the Governor I have served you as your Commonwealth's Attorney.

My duties have been performed conscientiously and to the best of my ability. No one can charge truthfully that my duties have been neglected.

I have not, nor will I now neglect them in a scramble for office. In a fair and conscientious way have I asked for your endorsement.

The canvass is at a close. You are the judges of my efficiency. I shall maintain the dignity of the office to the last. All violations of the law—election or other—will be prosecuted without fear or favor.

Your support is earnestly solicited.

Respectfully, M. L. DOWNS.

July 26th, 1913.

Qualification for Office.

At the primary election to be held on next Saturday, August 2d, county officials of Boone county will be chosen for another four years, as the county is overwhelmingly Democratic the nominees of the primary will, barring all unforseen accidents, be elected.

With this assurance, the chief duty developing upon the voters at the forthcoming primary will be the selection of men who are capable in every sense to fill the offices to which they aspire in that manner which will promote the best interests of the county with least expense to the taxpayers. And capability should be the determining element in the selections of any man who aspires for office. It is true, in this, as in other counties, men have in the past been elected to office more on account of friendship and certain personal considerations, than for any reason of fitness or qualification. This is a grand mistake, as we are moving to an area in politics when personal element is not of such moment as it was years ago. People are demanding today a higher degree of efficiency in public officials than ever before. It points to better administrations of the various offices, and, in the whole, to better government. It furthermore establishes a fact that the people are more deeply concerned as to the government under which they live, and recognize that the first step in its betterment must be in the selection of men capable in every way to discharge the duties of the office which they seek and for which they ask the public sufferage.

All other things being equal the logical thing to do would be to give friendship the lead in the matter of choice. A voter cannot be true to the best conception of his duty if he does otherwise, therefore it would be well for every voter at the coming primary to measure well the qualifications of the man who asks his support.

In this we are merely speaking for the best interest of the county and all its people, and neither for nor against the candidacy of any man.

A Serious Accident.

Bolander's threshing machine was involved in a serious accident last Tuesday about 7:30 a. m., on Elijah's creek at the foot of what is known as the Gordon hill, and young Bolander was badly scalded all over his person, his face only escaping, while Buzz Rockwell who was going with the machine was struck by a piece of timber and slightly injured. Bolander was taken to a Cincinnati hospital and at last accounts he was doing as well as could be expected of one so badly injured. The machine, which is from Ohio, had finished threshing the grain in the Taylorsport bottoms and was on its way to the Francesville neighborhood, and when attempting to cross a small bridge on the public road near the foot of the Gordon hill, the bridge collapsed under the weight of the engine which fell several feet into the ravine. The engine went down head foremost and turned over on its side, and young Bolander was caught in the escaping steam, and when he was rescued he was thought to be fatally scalded. The engine was injured considerable and was not removed until yesterday. Mr. Bolander has been coming to this county for many years, where he does considerable work every season.

Mentioned for State Office.

Among those mentioned in connection with a State office, next time is Alvin Steger, Circuit Clerk of Owen county who it is said will be a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Clerk of the Court of Appeals in 1915. He is one of the best known politicians and party workers in "Sweet Owen" and his friends claim if he gets in the race he will have the solid support of that end of the Seventh Congressional district behind him. The name of Mr. Steger is probably the first to be mentioned in connection with the next appellate clerkship.—Louisville Times.

An industrious colored woman in Burlington is minus $21 which was stolen from her home while she was away from home at work. The parties who committed the theft, it is believed, are known, as they have been spending money quite liberally the past week.

A CARD TO THE VOTERS.

To the Voters of Boone Co:—

I am advised that as the day of the primary draws near more slanderous stories are in circulation against me in your county. It is needless for me to say that they are false but I think best to warn my friends to turn a deaf ear to such stories.

Thanking you for your Loyalty, I am, Sincerely,

JOHN J. HOWE.
Democratic Candidate for Commonwealth's Attorney.

State Superintendent of Schools Barksdale Hamlett has announced that the school per capita tax will remain at $4, the same as last year. According to the last school census there are 721,813 school children in the State. This is a decrease of 12,236 from last year.

FROM ALL PARTS OF KENTUCKY.

Carlisle.—Nine cents per pound for stock hogs for delivery August 20 prevails in Nicholas county.

Mountain climbers may gain experience by crossing some of our streets while the latter are in their present condition.—Pikeville Progressive Kentuckian.

Another good thing we can say for Harlan is that the county jail doors are standing wide open, there being no prisoners. And there are six candidates for jailer.—Harlan Enterprise.

There are thirteen candidates for jailer in Mercer county. An unlucky number. Twelve of the candidates will doubtless share this opinion after August 2.—Georgetown Times.

The swimming parties are growing more and more popular every day, though there are some times when the river is muddy that it would seem the parties were being "kalsomined," rather than bathing.—Hazard Herald.

Mason county should be one of the banner wheat growing counties of Kentucky and instead of growing thousands of bushels we should produce millions of bushels of this premier foodstuff. This year's wheat yield is one of the best in years, while the quality is very fine.—Maysville Public Ledger.

Col. Mike Courtney offers an excellent suggestion to aid in pure elections. He says let all the candidates organize a fishing party and leave a week before the primary and remain away until a week after the primary in some out-of-the-way place where they could receive no word by messenger or telephone.—Winchester Democrat.

According tto County Engineer Crump there probably has never been such an interest taken in road matters in Warren county in its history as there is at present. There has been more good, substantial road work done within the last few months than at any other one period in many any other one period in many years.—Bowling Green Messenger.

Mr. S. S. Clay, a well known and substantial farmer, living near Carlisle, stated to the Advocate Monday that in the many years he has marketed hogs, never had he obtained the high price of nine cents per pound for them. He sold twenty stock hogs to D. L. Smith to go August 20, and the purchaser, he says, never returned a word when he priced them at nine cents.—Carlisle Advocate.

Mr. Lucian Littlepage, of the Mortons Gap country, has fourteen peafowls. These are very pretty birds and the feathers are very fine. He has more demand for them than can be supplied. These are the only birds of this kind in this part of the country and they are worth going miles to see. He claims that they are no trouble to raise and better than turkey to eat.—Earlington Bee.

Carlisle.—It is announced that up to this time between 40 and 50 per cent. of the poolers of Nicholas county have signed proxies authorizing the Committee of Five selected at the recent mass meeting of poolers here to vote for them in the coming stockholders' meeting of the Burley Tobacco Company in Lexington. All of these have signified their desire to retain the present management of the company.

John W. Moore, of near town, is, if reports are true, the most patriotic man in Magoffin county, for we are told that he is the only man in the county who flies Old Glory over his home. Mr. Moore has a flagpole and hoists the Stars and Stripes in front of his beautiful residence each morning. Why shouldn't other citizens emulate this excellent idea and imbue t heir children with thoughts of the worth of our flag?—Salyersville Mountaineer.

Mrs. Luther Conover, who lives two miles out of town, swallowed a needle seven years ago. A few days ago she noticed a hardened cake on her left thigh, giving her a great deal of trouble. A physician was called, lanced the place and the needle she swallowed seven years before was extracted. It was a steel needle with a gold eye.—Adair Co. News

Prof. Ivan E. McDougle, who has been in Columbia, tells us that while there he was shown the needle that had been in its hiding place so long.—Richmond Climax.

Somerset.—When the petitions with 2,300 names signed thereto were presented to County Judge R. C. Tartar by the attorneys for the Local Option Committee asking that an election be called in Pulaski county for September 22 to vote on the question as to whether or not spirituous, vinous or malt liquors should be sold in Pulaski county, the attorneys for the "wet" side presented a petition with thirteen names asking that their names be withdrawn from one of the petitions signed by them asking for the election, and the withdrawl of their names reduced one precinct below the required 25 per cent. of names and the election was not called. This is the third attempt made by the "drys" in the past six months to get local option in Pulaski county. One time the election was called and held, but was knocked out by the Court of Appeals.

The candidates are approaching next Saturday with fear and trembling.

The premium catalogues for the next fair at Florence are being distributed.

The hot, dry weather the past two weeks cut the crop of blackberries short.

Lloyd Norris, of Petersburg, bought a handsome Studebaker auto last week.

Garden vegetation looks much better since the splendid showers of last week.

Kenton county has oiled the dusty sections of the Lexington pike lying in the county limits.

William Kirkpatrick is assembling material for building an addition to his business place.

E. Mamm of the Hebron neighborhood, was transacting business in Burlington, Friday of last week.

Russell Smith and Irvin Rue went to Gunpowder creek yesterday to land some of the big fish.

Let every Democratic voter go to the polls next Saturday and cast his vote for his choice of the candidates.

Arch Acra, who resides down on Middle creek, is bringing some very fine black berries to Burlington customers.

This week the wise ones are telling how it is going to be done—next week they will be able to tell you how it was done—IF.

Elbert Clore is preparing three or four young horses to exhibit at the fairs this season that will make some one hustle to beat.

The following candidates have visited Burlington the past week—H. W. Riley, Malchus Souther, Temp Graves, Lewis Clore, Jas. F. Northcutt.

There are several persons in this county who will, next Saturday, be informed in regard to a matter in which they have been in the dark for some time.

Mrs. P. A. Ryle was taken to a hospital in Cincinnati, one day last week, for treatment for some disease with which she has been troubled for some time.

Next week we will be able to give the list of officers and passengers who will make the trip up "Salt River" on the elegant side wheel steamer "Primary."

One of the best general rains that has fallen in this county within a month fell the first part of last week, reviving the corn and vegetable crops which were suffering greatly.

The Trimble County Fiscal Court met at Bedford Saturday and rescinded a former order for paying $8,000 on the county's turnpike bonds, and ordered this amount placed in the hands of the road engineer for the purchase of road machinery.—Milton News.

So far as the Recorder has any information the primary campaign now about a close has been conducted on a higher plane than any of the past in this county. There has been very little mud slinging aand lieing indulged in, and the candidates have come up to the present with good feeling towards each other. This is as it should be.

The weather last Saturday afternoon was delightful for out door amusements, consequently a very large crowd of the devotees of Terpsichore assembled at Harvest Home grounds where the light fantastic was tripped for several hours. The excellent music on hand stimulated the young people in their desire to dance and the musicians were made to earn their money. The committee in charge is entitled to much praise for the success of the occasion.

Mrs. Susan Kirkpatrick, who, a few weeks since, vacated the residence in which the Consolidated Telephone Exchange is kept in Burlington, has moved back to that residence. Since Mrs. Kirkpatrick vacated the residence two other families have moved in, remained a few days and went back from whence they came. To get an occupant for the exchange building has been a great source of annoyance to President Crouch, who is delighted with having Mrs. Kirkpatrick back, enabling him to keep a force of efficient and reliable operators without further trouble.

Sunday was a busy day along criminal lines with Sheriff Hume. Ed. Scales, colored, of Erlanger, came over to Burlington and became obstreperous when the sheriff gave him his choice of going to jail or returning to Erlanger. Scales chose to go to jail, consequently the joke is on Erlanger. In the afternoon the sheriff was telephoned to come to Richwood, where there was trouble again in the railroad construction camp. He was gone only a short time when he returned with a negro man whom he lodged in jail to await an investigation by the next grand jury.

A CARD.

To the Voters of Boone Co:

I take this method in expressing my gratitude and appreciation for the kindness shown me in my canvass of this county in the race for assessor. I don't think there is a candidate for any office in the county who has been shown more courtesy or been taken care of better than I. This I certainly appreciate. I wish to say to the people whom this may concern, should I be elected I will have for deputy Walter Riddell, of whom comment is unnecessary and if elected I will try to treat the people as nice as they have treated me—if defeated I will remember their kindness just the same. I have tried to conduct my campaign as honorably as possible, and thanking each and every one for past favors and kindness rendered me, I beg to remain your friend,

JAMES F. NORTHCUTT.

BASE BALL.

Burlington 7; Erlanger 5.
Belleview 4; Hebron 2.
Burlington Kids 5; Belleview Kids 3.

The Burlington team defeated Erlanger on the grounds of the latter last Saturday afternoon 7 to 5. The third ball pitched in the game was found by Courtney Kelly for two sacks, and along came Clore with a single and Tolin with another double, which resulted in two runs. In the fourth inning Burlington found Carter for three singles and a double netting four runs. It was in this inning that Erlanger got busy, getting three singles and a home run, all of which resulted in three runs. In the eighth Erlanger got two singles and two runs, and in the ninth a base on balls and an error allowed Burlington to put over one run, Huey had two bad innings, and allowed nine hits, while Carter allowed only seven. Erlanger made seven errors, only two of which figured in the run getting, while Burlington had three errors only one of which figured in the score. Huey struck out 12 and Carter 3. Burlington did her best team work of the season.

Belleview Kid team came to Burlington last Saturday afternoon and were defeated by the Burlington Kids 5 to 3, in a very nicely played game.

Belleview defeated Hebron last Saturday 4 to 2. Nice game.

Burlington base ball team will play the newly organized Erlanger team at Burlington next Saturday August 2. The Erlanger club is under a new management, many new faces appearing in the line-up which strengthens the team considerably. The Burlington team is playing much better ball than they have in the past and a great game is expected. Come out and vote for your man and see a good game. Game called at 3 p. m.

The election officers at the coming primary will be called upon to decide who are qualified to vote, and as there is only a Democratic ballot in this county no one but Democrats according to the instructions sent out with the ballots will be entitled to vote; and if any voter is challenged he must be required to make oath that he voted the Democratic ticket at the last regular election, or, if for any reason he failed to vote at that election, then he must make oath that he supported that ticket, and has affiliated with the Democratic party, voting for and supporting its nominees and abiding by the rules and regulations of the Democratic party. These rules were laid down by the Court of Appeals in a recent decision construing the primary election law.

A CARD.

To the Voters of Boone Co:

A report has been started by some one that I have given up the race for assessor. At no time since I entered the race for the nomination have I ever thought of quitting, for I have met with encouragement from the beginning and my prospects for success are more flattering now than at any time, and I will run to the close, barring all reports to the contrary.

I have made no combination with any candidate or set of candidates to elect myself or compass the defeat of any other candidate.

I have made this race so far on honorable principles and using only honorable methods without charges or feeling against any of my opponents, regarding them as honorable and competent men, worthy of any man's steel, and am using neither money nor whisky, being opposed to the use of both in elections. In conclusion I ask my friends to stand by me to the end and get others to do so and I will surely win.

Respectfully,
HARRY RILEY.

Robert, son of A. W. Gaines out on the Florence pike, was pretty badly hurt last Sunday morning when a horse he had hitched to a plank fence pulled back, breaking a plank from the fence, the plank striking young Gaines on the back of the head and neck. For a time it was thought he was dangerously injured.

From the political dope the Recorder has been able to collect this week it appears that each of the candidates in next Saturday's primary will be a winner.

For You and Your Wife

A cheerful, pretty bedroom will help you to start your day in a cheerful, pleasant mood. Its a haven of rest for you to come back to at night. And all day long its a pleasure to your wife.

To make a pretty bedroom it is more important to have tasteful furniture that harmonizes, than furniture that merely costs a lot. A brass bed, or a pretty iron bed if you prefer, dresser and chiffonier, a low rocking chair and one or two straight back chairs to match, a shirtwaist box, light colored rug on the floor,—all this does not cost vrey much, IF YOU BUY FROM US, and makes a truly pretty room. Come in and talk it over.

Don't forget to get a STEARNS & FOSTER mattress. That is what makes your bedroom a haven of rest. No other mattress is so comfortable.

Made in all grades of superiority; $9.00 upward. Windsor Grade at $13.50 is guaranteed SUPERIOR TO ANY OTHER ADVERTISED MATTRESS. We sell it on 60 nights trial. If you CAN part with it at the end of that time we will return your money without question or comment.

Sermon on Luck.

We'll tell you about the thing called luck. It comes to the person who keeps the weeds cut down so that it can find him. Luck sometimes walks up and collars an idler, but it is more apt to nab the man who is busy doing the best he can all the time. Luck isn't lying around on the street allowing the loafers to cover it with whittlings. Neither is it in a stream waiting for some lazy fisherman to hook it. If you sit around and wait for luck to hand you a bag of gold and make you a rich man you are pretty apt to end your days in the poorhouse. A four-leaf clover will bring more luck to the busy fellow than it will to the loafer. It may seem a little tough for a man to work hard for a long time and then have his earnings all swept from him at a single stroke, but it is better to have had it, and lost it than never to have had it at all. And another thing; luck isn't labeled. So it will do you no good to stand around and look for it. When luck starts out to look for you, you won't be able to hide from it. Go to work.

We notice in the exchanges statements of meetings held at different points in the states favoring a Bull and starting a pool for the 1913 crop of Burley. We do not believe the people of Owen at the present time will favor pooling their 1913 crop of tobacco. The crop will be short in acreage and may be short in quality and from present prospects the price will naturally go higher.—Owen Democrat.

TO RAISE BUCKWHEAT

Crop Fills Best in a Rather Cool Season.

Makes Good Feed for Almost All Animals and Has Nutritive Ratio of Near One to Seven—Helps Greatly in Ridding of Weeds.

(By A. J. LEGG.)

Buckwheat is a crop that can be sown any time after the danger from frost is over up to about the first of August, with reasonable success.

The buckwheat usually fills best in a rather cool season and in localities where midsummer is very hot it is best to defer sowing the buckwheat until late in the season so as to give from 60 to 70 days for it to mature a crop before frost.

Sixty days is sufficient for a crop to make itself usually.

The grain makes a good feed for almost all animals and it has a nutritive ratio of near one to seven, so it is a fattening grain.

The bloom of the buckwheat plant produces much nectar and there will usually be plenty of bees on hand during the blooming season to gather the nectar.

In some localities in the south, buckwheat has largely superseded the oat crop. Often it is sown after wheat and thus the farmer is enabled to reap two crops from a field in one season instead of allowing his stubble to grow up to weeds after harvest.

The buckwheat crop is a great help in ridding the land of weeds as it is a rapid grower and keeps the weeds back.

If the wheat stubble is turned and sowed to buckwheat and clover there is not much chance for the weeds to mature seeds.

The soil should be plowed and let settle for two or three weeks before the buckwheat is sown.

Drill in from three pecks to a bushel of seed with from 125 to 150 pounds of good grade acid phosphate per acre with a wheat drill.

It is a good plan to sow timothy and clover with the buckwheat.

Put the timothy seed in the grass seeder box and mix the clover seed with the fertilizer.

The clover seed is thus drilled in rows and a little below the general surface of the ground. This protects the clover from the winter freezing and the soil is in better condition to grow the grass than if it had been sown on the wheat fields in the spring.

HANDY DEVICE FOR FARMERS

Maine Man Has Invented Implement for Picking Potatoes Intended to Save One's Back.

Any farmer will tell you that the job of picking potatoes is a back-breaking operation. If you don't believe it try standing with your fingertips touching the floor for a day or so. A man in Maine has invented a picking device which renders this stooping unnecessary. The implement has a long handle with a net affixed to one end. Projecting from this net is a scoop. The net is jointed to the handle and moves backward and forward. Fastened to this bar that holds the net is a rake, which projects in front of the receptacle and rakes the tubers into it. As the scoop is shoved along in the row the rake is drawn toward it by the same movement and the potatoes scraped into the net as rapidly as they could be collected by hand and much more comfortably.

Measuring Stack of Hay.

To estimate the weight of a stack of hay, take the height in feet to the eaves and add half the height from the eaves to the crown. Multiply the reply by the length in feet, then multiply the width in feet and divide by 27, which gives the contents in cubic yards. New hay will average about 130 pounds to the cubic yard and from 160 to 190 pounds of old hay will be contained in the same cubic area.

Measles.

Measles is very common with small pigs. Since it is a contagion it spreads very rapidly when once there is an outbreak in the herd. Some of its more common symptoms are coughing and sneezing. The eyes are red and watery and there is generally a discharge from the nose. The appetite is generally impaired and there is a desire to remain in the nest or bed.

Scald Calves' Pail.

Pails from which the calves are fed need frequent scalding at this time of year.

Spray for Swine.

If you cannot provide a dip for swine, give them a spray The boys can spray hogs without any trouble.

CATBIRD EATS MANY INSECTS

Although Much Damage Done to Small Fruits and Berries, Bird Cannot Be Termed Injurious.

(By H. W. WEISGERBER, in the Farm and Fireside.)

I recall one summer afternoon, while hoeing in the garden, of having a female catbird fly over the fence and alight on the ground almost at my feet and pick up the worms and small insects that she could find. I honestly believe that she was the most distressed-looking wild bird that I had ever seen. Whether she had been sick or had grown thin by brooding the eggs too long, I know not; but it hardly could have been the latter case, unless the nest had been despoiled, for she did not carry away any food, but swallowed whatever she found.

I stood still, and she came still closer, and I then noticed an appealing look in her eyes that moved me to pity the poor creature. It was real pathetic. I stopped my work and let her gather what food she needed. Poor bird! For who could tell what trouble had been hers?

The catbird has rightly been called the northern mocking-bird; and so it might well be, for its size, shape and coloring so nearly resemble its more gifted southern cousin that the name well applies. Having never heard the mocking-bird, I cannot judge as to musical ability; but the catbird, while a gifted musician and mimic, is not the polyglot that the mocker is. But if anyone doubts the musical ability of the catbird, just let him get out early on some May morning, and all his former doubts will be at rest.

Although the catbird sometimes does considerable harm by destroying small fruits and berries, the bird cannot be considered injurious. On the contrary, in most parts of the country it does far more good than harm. Outside of the small fruits, which consist mostly of wild berries in our eastern states, the catbird feeds upon destructive insects.

TESTING FERTILITY OF EGGS

Interesting Experiments Made by Ontario Station by Removing Males From the Hens.

The Ontario experiment station made a series of experiments in testing fertility of eggs, which are interesting. They separated ten laying hens from the male and placed the eggs in the incubator each day to test them.

During the first four days 70 per cent. proved fetile, fifth day 61 per cent., sixth day 60 per cent., eighth day 12 per cent., ninth day 2 per cent. and tenth day all were infertile. Then they put a male with six laying hens which had not been with a male, and tested the eggs in the same way. They found 30 per cent. fertile on the third day, 42 per cent. on the fourth day, and fifth day 50 per cent., sixth day 60 per cent., seventh day 60 per cent., eighth day 68 per cent, ninth day 70 per cent. and tenth day 74 per cent. It would seem that nearly three-fourths of the eggs are fertile four days after the male is taken away, or a week after the male was put in. There would probably be some difference in the males, however, and number of hens might have considerable influence.

Long-lived Horses.

An authority on horses says the gray will live the longest and that roans come next in order. Blacks, he asserts, seldom live to be over twenty and creams rarely exceed fifteen. The bay he omits. It is a common observation that grays and sorrels often live to a useful old age. As to the alleged short terms of the other colors there is room for discussion.

Pasturing Alfalfa.

Alfalfa is the ideal pasture crop for hogs. Divide the field in three or four parts and pasture each only a few days at a time. This enables the plants to grow undisturbed most of the time and gives the hogs fresh tender pasture all the time. The change is better for both the pasture and the swine.

Hardy Chicks.

Chicks reared in the open air from the beginning are, as a rule, more hardy than those brought up like hot-house plants in warm rooms, and on board floors. They develop quicker and are less liable to disease—two very essential items in profitable poultry raising.

Teach the Youngsters.

Take the "little feller" up on the mower or harvester with you now and then. He will step about a foot higher after that and tell how "pa took me 'round with him on the machine." Such things help.

AUGUST-SOWN CLOVER

Summer Rains Will Keep Soil in Good Condition.

Seed May Be Brushed Over After It Has Been Sowed and Too Much Rather Than Too Little Should Be Broadcasted.

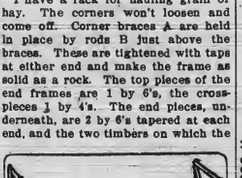
(By RALPH TAYLOR.)

Clover land intended for summer sowing should be plowed so as to start the weeds, then as soon as they begin to grow well they should be harrowed to death and care should be taken that they stay dead.

Clover can be sown in August on soil that is light and sandy as the late summer rains will, as a rule, keep the ground in good condition. When the ground is in first-class condition there should be applied about 10 bushels of air-slacked lime and about 100 pounds of sulphate of potash per acre. Just before seeding the land it should be harrowed, or cultivated and harrowed, several times, in order to destroy the weeds.

The seed may be brushed in after it is sowed, so as to cover it, and too much, rather than too little seed should be used from eight to ten quarts being broadcasted, according to preference, allowance being made for loss of seed due to unsoundness, consumed by birds, failure to germinate by not being covered.

The seeding should not be done later than September, as a limit, as it has been demonstrated that later seeding may result in failure, but not necessarily so.



The grass will make a good growth before winter, and if manure is plentiful it will be of much benefit to apply it as a winter mulch. Early in the spring a light application of nitrate of soda about 50 pounds per acre and 100 pounds of sulphate of potash will give the grass a good start.

While fertilizers and manure are the main agencies for securing a good crop, yet much depends upon the condition of the soil when the grass is seeded, for upon the preparation will depend to a certain extent the ability of the plants to secure moisture the succeeding year, as according to the preparation of the soil will the root growth progress and the retentive capacity of the soil itself be increased, while the more care given the soil at the beginning the better the crop after it starts off in growth.

SAVE THE SHATTERED GRAIN

Rack That Will Prove of Convenience Is Shown in Illustration—How to Put Together.

I have a rack for hauling grain or hay. The corners won't loosen and come off. Corner braces A are held in place by rods B just above the braces. These are tightened with taps at either end and make the frame as solid as a rock. The top pieces of the end frames are 1 by 6's, the cross-pieces 1 by 4's. The end pieces, underneath, are 2 by 6's tapered at each end, and the two timbers on which the rack rests are 2 by 10's. The floor is tight and has a 2 by 4 around the edge. This catches all shattered grain or alfalfa leaves, writes E. W. Higgins of Eddy, Okla., in the Farmers' Mail and Breeze. By removing eight taps the end frames may be taken off and I have a flat rack for hauling baled hay.

Whitewash the Stable.

Although whitewash is not an active disinfectant, in the usual meaning of the term, it is an excellent purifier and should in all cases be used in stables after they have been thoroughly cleansed and disinfected with other agents. Hot whitewash for this purpose is better than cold. If chloride of lime is added to whitewash in the proportion of four ounces to the gallon, the value of this application is greatly increased. It is advisable to whitewash cow stables frequently, at least once in six months, and better every three months where diseased animals have been kept.

Watch the New Horses.

Horse owners should be particularly watchful of new horses taken into the stable, as they may have a mild form of glanders or farcy, both of which are incurable, deadly and extremely contagious to horses and to human beings as well. A horse with a running nose may be as dangerous as a mad dog.

Watch Fowls Closely.

Watch your stock closely during the hot weather and any birds that look a little "peaked" because of the heat should be marked so that they will not be used as breeds. Only the most vigorous birds should find their way into the breeding pen. Birds that will stand the hot weather well are usually vigorous birds.

Ration for Poultry.

If you mix your own feed, use one part corn, two parts oats, and two parts wheat. Give the fowls lots of green food, and do not forget the grit, oyster shells, charcoal, beef scraps, and plenty of fresh water.

The Panama Canal
and the
Isthmus in History and Romance

By Edward W. Pickard

Mr. Pickard is that type of globe-trotting author who seeks the quaint and curious places and people as subjects for his clever descriptive articles. In his present series of twelve articles which we have arranged to print, he has touched not only the actual work of building the canal, and the people who have accomplished it, but has gone into what the newspaper worker knows as the side lines, and which as a rule are of as much interest as the main story. This is particularly true in this case. After our readers have completed the last of Mr. Pickard's articles they will have a better understanding of the Panama Canal, and conditions within and surrounding the canal zone.

For soreness of the muscles, whether induced by violent exercise or injury, there is nothing better than Chamberlain's Liniment. This liniment also relieves rheumatic paine. For sale by J. W. Berkshire & Son and E. E. Kelly.—Adv.

HUSBAND RESCUED DESPAIRING WIFE

After Four Years of Discouraging Conditions, Mrs. Bullock Gave Up in Despair. Husband Came to Rescue.

Catron, Ky.—In an interesting letter from this place, Mrs. Bettie Bullock writes as follows: "I suffered for four years, with womanly troubles, and during this time, I could only sit up for a little while, and could not walk anywhere at all. At times, I would have severe pains in my left side.

The doctor was called in, and his treatment relieved me for a while, but I was soon confined to my bed again. After that, nothing seemed to do me any good: I had gotten so weak I could not stand, and I gave up in despair.

At last, my husband got me a bottle of Cardui, the woman's tonic, and I commenced taking it. From the very first dose, I could tell it was helping me. I can now walk two miles without its tiring me, and am doing my work."

If you are all run down from womanly troubles, don't give up in despair. Try Cardui, the woman's tonic. It has helped more than a million women, in its 50 years of wonderful success, and should surely help you, too. Your druggist has sold Cardui for years. He knows what it will do. Ask him. He will recommend it. Begin taking Cardui today.

DE LESSEPS PALACE

Colon, C. Z.—For the American resident of the Canal Zone life is not all beer and skittles. There is plenty of beer, but I have not seen a skittle here. Perhaps I would not have recognised one if I had seen it.

The American in a foreign land is not so tenacious of his home customs as is the Englishman, and in Panama he finds himself not only in a tropic clime but in the midst of a civilization much older than his own. Consequently he yields in many particulars to the customs of that clime and that civilization. The mid-day siesta of two hours, when he disrobes and dozes in a cool room, the dip in the ocean before dinner and the evening stroll in the plaza all appeal to him as to the native and have become a part of his life there.

At the same time the influx of northerners has had its effect on the Panamanians, especially, perhaps, in the matter of sports. Bullfights no longer are to be seen here and cock fighting has suffered a marked decline. In place of them the native now enjoys frequent wrestling matches and prizefights, indulges in tennis to some extent and has taken kindly to the national American sport of baseball.

It is the American woman on whom the changed conditions of life bear hardest, for housekeeping on the isthmus is attended by many annoyances. A good many people have the idea that a woman in the tropics lies in a hammock all day and at meal time picks her food from the branches of trees that shade her resting place. As a matter of fact she must do her household shopping as at home, and the domestic problem is with her here as there, only more so if possible. For clothing and standard groceries she usually goes to the store of the commissary department, where she can buy well and cheaply. But for fruit and many of the vegetables there is the daily trip to the market. In that spacious building—I am speaking now of Colon and Panama—are scores of booths and tables, attended by Jamaicans, Chinese and native Panamanians, and piled high with taro, breadfruit, soursops, guavas, papayas, bananas, plantains, alligator pears, mangoes, oranges, cocoanuts and a dozen other tropical products. The layout is tempting, but the purchasing is a task. Such a thing as a fixed price is unknown and one must bargain diligently or get the worst of it. And the insolence of the negro women is often commensurate with their ignorance. The native meat market is quite "impossible," for white people from the United States, for the meat, roughly hacked, is sold immediately after slaughtering, and the screening enforced by the American sanitary department is rendered ineffective by open doors.

The domestic servants employed by Americans in the zone are almost all Jamaican negresses. They are neat and clean, but their stupidity usually is monumental. Every detail of the household operations must be driven into their heads, and their minds seemingly are on the island home they have left, for their memory is almost nil and their eyes see little close at hand. Then, too, after a year or so of service and saving they begin to think of returning to Jamaica and grow "weary."

"Why, Blanche," said one shocked housewife, "here it is eleven o'clock and the breakfast dishes and kitchen things not washed, and the ants all over them!"

"Oh, marm, I couldn't do them, I'm so exharsted this morning," was Blanche's reply.

That's a mild sample of what must be contended with.

Speaking of ants, there is another of the annoyances of housekeeping in the tropics. The ants are everywhere, in unbelievable numbers and most extraordinary activity. Screens do not keep them out nor insect exterminators discourage them. They must simply be endured. If they take a fancy to a nicely growing garden of young vegetables, they cut and carry off all the leaves in a night. It is the so-called leaf ant that does that. All over the isthmus he is to be seen, moving in processions along well beaten paths, each individual carrying a leaf or other bit of foliage. One day I saw a long line of them moving through the sparse turf, all carrying tiny red blossoms cut from a small weed. It was a very picturesque miniature parade. No place and no age has been free from the cockroach, and in Panama he grows to an enormous size and spends some of his time and energy eating the covers of bound books.

Rust and mould add to the woes of the American housekeeper, and many articles she must keep in "dry closets" in which electric lamps are kept burning.

There are not in Panama a great many of the old pure-blooded Spanish families, whose members possess education and refinement, and those that are there are not especially fond of Americans. Consequently there is not much social intercourse between the two races. The social activities of the Americans have three general centers—the Tivoli club, the Washington Cotillion club and the Young Men's Christian association. The first two are dance organizations and give balls alternate fortnights at the Tivoli hotel in Ancon and the Washington hotel in Colon. These affairs are quite formal and attract the best of the Americans from all parts of the zone.

As for the Y. M. C. A., its work on the isthmus really deserves a chapter to itself, for it has been one of the big factors in the successful building of the canal. At first it was found impossible to persuade men from the United States to remain long on the isthmus. The pay was good, the work interesting, but homesickness found easy victims and they resigned and went back to the States in discouraging numbers. Several remedies were tried, and finally the commission established a club house in every zone town of any size and wisely put them in charge of the Y. M. C. A. In these houses are billiard rooms, bowling alleys, gymnasiums, soda fountains, libraries, lounging rooms and a dozen other conveniences, and each house has a hall large enough for dances and amateur dramatics and musical entertainments. The secretaries in charge have been exceedingly active in the organization of bowling, baseball, billiard and other leagues, and the tourneys are continuous and of great interest. Of course no intoxicating drinks are to be found in these clubs, but in other respects they are conducted on lines so liberal as to be sometimes surprising. In one of them, for instance, I saw a number of young men and women dancing in the hall, to the music of a phonograph, immediately after the close of the Sunday evening religious service. This may have been an exceptional case, as it was in one of the more isolated towns.

In Ancon, Cristobal and some others of the larger American towns flourishing women's clubs have been maintained, and these were united in a zone federation which dissolved only this year, feeling that its work was done with the virtual completion of the canal. The clubs have done a great deal in the way of philanthropy and study, and many social functions are given under their auspices.

As may readily be comprehended, life for Americans in the zone is much like life in an American suburban town, and it has some of the disadvantages of the latter. Gossip and social jealousies are prevalent here, as there, and not a few women have been driven back to the States by them. Disputes over promotions and the assignments of living quarters cause bitterness and estrangements, and of course there are innumerable complaints of undue influence—"pull"—in these matters. In some cases it must be admitted there has been cause for these complaints, and, sad to say, often woman has been the cause. Her influence with certain of the high officials cannot be doubted, and sometimes it has results that are to be deplored.

Here is one instance of the power exerted by "pull." A man for some years has held a responsible position with the Panama Railroad company, and who has a wife, two daughters and a young son, has been waiting long for housekeeping quarters, which are at a premium. Two minor clerks of the railway had been attentive to the daughters, but, being objectionable to the father, were discouraged. But the clerks had some influential connections, and in revenge have so contrived things that the family in question has been passed by repeatedly in the assignment of housekeeping quarters. The father and son live in one building, the mother and daughters in another, and all must take their meals at the hotel.

Naturally, not many of the Americans on the isthmus will remain there after the completion of the canal. A few of the doctors may engage in general practice there—some already have done so—and some of the workmen may find the tropic climate so to their liking that they will stay. But nearly all are looking rather eagerly to the time when they can return to the states. The engineers and physicians no doubt will find that the experience they have had will be invaluable to them in the getting of positions and practice when they come home. But to readjust themselves to the old conditions of living may not be easy for the men and women who have been in the zone for years.

WORK LATE POTATOES

Eternal Vigilance Is Price of Substantial Yield.

Imperatively Necessary to Maintain Dirt or Dust Mulch to Prevent Needless Waste of Moisture by Evaporation.

(By W. M. KELLEY.)

During July and August the right kind of work must be given the late potatoes regularly, for eternal vigilance in the potato patch is the price of a good yield of tubers. If they are properly looked after they will clean in the rows, with hardly a weed in hills.

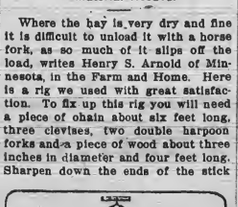
As soon as the plants show in rows across a field start the cultivator and set the teeth to run four or five inches deep the first time over the ground. This loosens up the compacted soil and gives the tiny rootlets a better chance to penetrate between the soil particles.

From then maintain a dirt or dust mulch in between the rows and around the hills. This is imperatively necessary to prevent the needless waste of moisture by evaporation. To check this the dirt mulch acts as a blanket by cutting off the multitudes of little holes which appear through the crust and through which the sun pumps the water out very rapidly.

It is a puzzle sometimes to know just what is the best tool to use at all times in cultivating potatoes through the growing season. The horse weeder is one that may be used at certain times in the potato field to alternate with the spring-toothed cultivator, especially when the potatoes are planted in drills.

It levels the ground and destroys a multitude of weeds. Then for a few days the cultivator takes hold and does better work than it would if the teeth followed right in the same teeth tracks as before.

The weeder sometimes does more damage than good, if used improperly. I like to use it in the afternoon as it does less injury in breaking off tender plants.



I keep the cultivator going very frequently over the same ground between the rows, working as close to the hills as possible. But if the season is wet I get out my old shovel plow and corrugate the surface quite deep.

This is for the purpose of exposing a much larger portion of the surface soil and thus hasted the evaporation of the excess of moisture therein. A moderate drought during the growing season does not do as much injury as too much moisture.

HANDLE VERY FINE DRY HAY

Difficulty of Unloading Obviated by Use of Rig Shown in Illustration —Material Needed.

Where the hay is very dry and fine it is difficult to unload it with a horse fork, as so much of it slips off the load, writes Henry S. Arnold of Minnesota, in the Farm and Home. Here is a rig we used with great satisfaction. To fix up this rig you will need a piece of chain about six feet long, three clevises, two double harpoon forks and a piece of wood about three inches in diameter and four feet long. Sharpen down the ends of the stick so they go through a link in the chain. Leave enough slack in the chain so that the middle is about one and a half feet from the middle of the stick. Fasten a fork to each end of the chain. The forks should be set crosswise to the spreader stick when set in the load. Set the forks opposite each other on the back end of the load and then on the front end. The advantages of this rig are that it will take a big forkful of hay and take it up clean. We use a sling on the bottom because it cleans the hay off so nice.

Man Without a System.

The man who is always behind in his work and frets and worries because he has so much to do is working without a system. No use trying to do more than one thing at a time and if one will adhere to this rule and have a time for doing everything day after day and month after month, the kinks will soon straighten out and he could do his work easily and without friction.

Feeding Place.

Pigs should never be fed on the ground in a yard or pen where their own excrement abounds. Changing from place to place in the pasture does very well in the summer, but in the winter a good feeding floor should be provided.

Keep on Studying.

What do you know about the things that grow on your farm besides the ones you make money out of? Good plan to study these things a bit now and then.

AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION AND THE RURAL COMMUNITY.

We hear much nowadays about agricultural extension work, demonstration, farms, boys' corn clubs better farming methods and a large number of other comparatively new agricultural enterprises, but many people fail to get a clear conception of what is to be accomplished by such work.

Agricultural extension work is accomplishing a twofold purpose first, in enabling farmers to realize a greater cash income, improving their land while so doing, and second, in producing a reflex action upon the farmer and his family which will enable them to improve themselves even more than they improve their farms. The two phases of the work go hand in hand, but the latter is, after all, the more fundamental and important.

There has been for many years a well recognized tendency to depreciate rural life and a general movement toward the towns and cities has been the result, this being largely responsible for the much talked of "high cost of living." This city-ward movement clearly indicates that something in the country needs improvement. The next question is: What needs improvement? The answer in part is, The farms, the roads, the schools, the churches and the homes themselves.

We all know that it takes money to accomplish many of these desired improvements, hence the extension worker seeks a means of assisting the farmer to increase his earnings by better cropping, use of more and better live stock, inaugurating new enterprises, and keeping farm accounts, etc., but incidentally strives to set the farmer and his family to thinking, to reading and to generally broadening their horizon that they may get more out of life in their home environment which is or may be made to be the best in the world.

Suppose that all agricultural extension endeavor could succeed in giving $1,000 in a day to every farmer in the State, without giving him any new incentive to betterment of his home or his community; would we dare to suppose that the roads, schools, churches and homes would at once become as much improved as we believe they will be twenty years hence? This money increase per capita is of course more than we can hope to accomplish, hence we see that the substantial rural betterment that is sure to be brought about is being accomplished by that indescribable influence which assists people to gain a new point of view upon life in both its economic and social phases.

Rome was not built in a day, neither can we expect great internal improvement of a nation in either rural or urban districts to be accomplished without time, which is a great and necessary factor.

In view of the almost self evident truths enumerated above, let every rural community in the State welcome any kind of endeavor for rural betterment and not count that effort vain, whose fruits cannot be exactly counted in dollars and cents.

The Extension Service of the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station is a potent worker for good in country improvement and so far as possible will help in such enterprises.

T. R. BRYANT,
Supt. Extension Division, Experiment Station, Lexington, Ky.

Owing to their inability to secure laborers, several farmers have been forced to the necessity of abandoning a portion of their wheat and rye crops which this year are the best grown in the country in many years. This is to be regretted, as good wheat, the kind Robertson county always grows, is needed at all times.—Mt. Olivet Tribune-Democrat.

Married—Harry D. Plunkett, of Walton, and Miss Frances Martin, Lexington, by Rev. John V. Hargit pastor of the Ninth Street Baptist church, Cincinnati, Saturday, July 26th. The young couple will make their home at Georgetown, Ky., where the groom is employed by the Q. & C. Railway Company. The marriage was a surprise to the young man's father, who had no intimation that his son was contemplating matrimonya. The young man is favorably known here where he has a host of friends, who wish him and his bonny bride, a long life of happiness and prosperity.

Rev. O. M. Huey, pastor of the Crescent Hill Baptist church, Louisville, was a visitor here Monday and his many friends were pleased to meet him. He was enroute to Mt. Zion, Grant county, where he is holding a protracted meeting at the Baptist church, assisted by Rev. Elmer Lucas, of Georgetown. Rev. Huey is meeting with great success with his pastorate of the Crescent Hill Baptist church, having paid it out of a heavy debt, after the task was considered hopeless. He has additions to his church nearly every meeting and had seven additions last Sunday.

The attractiveness of Walton and its great rained conveniences to metropolitan centers has occasioned many inquiries for farms and other real estate. Hardly a day passes but such an inquiry is made. With all her natural resources there is no reason why she should not advance rapidly from point of population. What Walton needs more than any other one thing is a commercial club made up of our good wide-awake business men to advertise and communicate to the outside world what she has to offer in the way of manufacturing, business and residential propositions. We know Walton's many advantages but others do not and it behooves us to inform them in a business like manner. Let's get busy.

Walton Lodge Knights of Pythias, had a delightful meeting last Thursday night, made so by a visit from John W. Carter, Grand Keeper of Records and Seal, of Lexington, and Bro. Wm. Atkins of Latonia, where they have one of the most progressive and up-to-date lodges in the State. Bro. Carter gave a full exemplification of all the secret work in the ranks of Page, Esquire and Knight in a very entertaining and pleasing manner, interweaving the explanation with general remarks of a nature that gave the members much enjoyment and information. Bro. Adkins made a pleasing speech that was appreciated by all as it was inspiring and encouraging to the members of this beautiful order. Others made talks for the good of the order, and it was almost midnight before the lodge adjourned.

Died—Mrs. Sarah Schulker, aged sixty-nine years, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Susie Antrobus, in Falmouth, July 23, after a lingering illness of several years from rheumatism, having been an invalid for the past six years. Mrs. Schulker was born in Grant county, Ky., and her maiden name was Hearne. Her husband died many years ago, but she is survived by eleven children, viz: Henry Schulker and Mrs. Susie Antrobus, of Falmouth, Mrs. Mary Twenty, of Toledo, Ohio; Joseph, John and Frank Schulker, of Kenton county; Geo. Lawrence and Benj. Schulker, of Ludlow, Ky.; Mrs. Matilda Kohler and Mrs. Elizabeth Johnson, of Dayton, Ohio. The funeral took place Friday at Falmouth from the Catholic church of which the deceased was a devout member, high mass being conducted by Rev. Father Dulaney, after which the remains were interred in the cemetery there.

Rev. Louis Koehler, pastor of the Walton Christian church, filled his regular appointment here Sunday morning. In the evening a lecture by Rev. P. H. Duncan, of Ludlow, with stereopticon views illustrative of foreign missionary work in India was greatly enjoyed by a crowded house, a large number being compelled to stand outside. The stereopticon machine was very ably handled by Roy D. Stamler who kindly consented to operate same. The lecture and views were given free, no collection even being taken up in order to show the great work being done in India by the foreign missionary society of the church. Bro. Duncan also contributes his services free for two weeks to demonstrate to numerous churches the benefits derived from this work. Rev. Duncan is so well and favorably known that he needs no introduction to our readers and is always warmly welcomed wherever he is known.

Mrs. A. B. Tompkins was called to Gallatin county Tuesday by the sudden death of her mother Mrs. Sylvinia Hamilton, wife of John Carroll Hamilton, she dying Monday night from heart failure, at the home of her son Alfred Hamilton. The deceased was born at Sandusky, Ohio, 68 years ago, and her maiden name was Rogers. She was married to John C. Hamilton about fifty years ago and their union was blessed with thirteen children, eleven of whom survive viz: Lee and Alfred Hamilton, of Gallatin county; John Hamilton, of Rising Sun, Indiana, Wm. Hamilton, of Lexington, Mrs. A. B. Tompkins, of Walton; Harry Hamilton of Salt Lake City Utah, Mrs. Nannie Hamilton, of Denver, Colorado, Mrs. Jessie Peters, of Faxon, Oklahoma, Mrs. Daisy Goodnight and Mrs. Irene Williams, of Chatanooga, Oklahoma; Mrs. Sylvia Hamilton, of Roanoke, Virginia. The deceased was one of the best women that ever lived in this section, being a christian in the truest sense, and loving and devoted wife and mother, and a kind and generous friend to all who came in contact with her. At one time she and her husband were among the wealthiest people of Gallatin county, and their generosity and hospitality was unbounded. Mrs. Hamilton was a devout member of the Methodist church, and her funeral took place at Warsaw Wednesday afternoon, Rev. W. J. Welburn conducting the services.

Newton Rouse, of Anderson, Indiana, and his daughter, Miss Leona, of Cincinnati, are spending the week here with his parents, W. R. Rouse and wife.

You say you have longed for years for the independent life of a farmer, but have never been able to get enough money together to buy a farm. But this is just where you are mistaken. For several years you have been drinking a good farm at the rate of one hundred square feet a gulp. If you doubt this statement, figure it out for yourself; An acre of land contains 43,560 square feet. Estimating for convenience, the land at $43.56 per acre, you will see that this brings the land to just one mill per square foot, one cent for ten square feet. Now pour down that fiery dose and just imagine that you are swallowing a strawberry patch. Call in five of your friends to help you gulp down that five hundred foot garden. Get on a prolonged spree some day, and see how long it will take you to swallow a pasture large enough to feed a cow; but then that glass of gin; there's dirt in it—one hundred square feet of good, rich dirt worth $43.56 per acre.—The Northern Messenger.

"They are swallowed up of wine."—Isaiah 28:7.

The Recorder could name the winners at the primary election next Saturday, but it prefers not to do so as by so doing it would destroy all interest in the several contests.

The teamsters' strike in Cincinnati is becoming serious, and many business houses are having much difficulty making deliveries of goods sold.

Voters should not pay any attention to damaging reports sprung on candidates on the eve of the election.

SPECIAL NOTICE

To My Friends and Patrons and The Public at Large.

I have perfected a system for repairing Buggies and Vehicles of all kinds whereby the work is better than ever, wearing longer, holding the luster just twice as long as the usual way of repairing. Another great advantage whereby it is far ahead of the old way is that I use no water on any part of the body or gear until the job is in the last coat of rubbing varnish, and by that time I have all parts of the body well protected, where in doing work the old way we rub with a rubbing stone out of water, called Filler, thereby letting the water get between the pannel of the body and the sill, loosening the plugs, rusting the screws and causing plugs to come out. That is why your pannels break in corners and come loose—water gets in and destroys the glue, letting the water stand there by rotting the wood.

Recollect I have been in the Carriage Business for 85 years, and have made it a life study. I have been working on my Dry System for the last four years and now have it perfected. While there is more work attached to my system and material is more in cost, my price for a Buggy still remains the same—$12.00 for a first-class job of painting and guaranteed to be such. If you want something cheaper in painting I will do it for you but at you risk.

Kelly Rubber Tires.

I have just bought a full supply of the Kelly Springfield Rubber Tires and am prepared to supply your wants at a moment's notice. I have 3,000 pounds now ready to put on while you wait for them at prices to suit everybody that wants a high-grade tire for just the same money they pay other people for a cheap grade. Of course you know I am prepared to do anything for you in the carriage maker's line. Come and see me and get prices and I'll assure you you will go home convinced you have been treated alright.

N. B.—I guarantee the Kelly Tire to be first quality—not second or third grade, and wear twice as long as anyother make of tire.

Yours respectfully,
H. G. COLLINS, Erlanger, Ky.

GREENCASTLE features are more than mere talking points; they really help. There are more practical features to be found in the Greencastle than any other Cabinet on the market.

It represents every up-to-the-minute idea for labor saving, and will positively give the user more time for recreation.

The Greencastle is sold entirely on its merits, and when you buy a Greencastle you are sure to get a 100 per cent Kitchen Cabinet value—we mean a Cabinet worth every cent you pay for it.

Every part of the Greencastle has its use. Every feature is placed to the greatest convenience of the housewife, without in the least putting herself out to use them. For instance, if you notice the arrangement of the flour hopper in other Cabinets you will find that it feeds from the top, which necessitates standing on a chair and lifting a heavy flour sack to it to fill it. Look at the Greencastle illustration, notice that the hopper tilts all the way to the top base and is filled from the back without any discomfiture. The glass sugar jar in the Greencastle supplants the poisonous metal contrivances which are furnished in other Cabinets placed on the door, the weight of which in time sags it.

The Greencastle Roll Doors is another exclusive feature, which open and close without moving a single article on the sliding top.

These and many other features are what bring out the superior qualities of the Greencastle, and is why we say you will get more practical good from this one than any other make on the market.

It will serve you obediently for life at the small cost of - - - - $28.50

Somerset.—A conflict has arisen between the Pulaski circuit court over the number of ballots to be printed for the August primary. County Judge R. C. Tartar issued an order directing the Co. Court Clerk to have printed only 50 per cent. more ballots for each of the three political parties than was polled by that party in the last Presidential election. Circuit Judge Bethurum, who was at a Northern resort for his health, hurried home and yesterday ordered that the County Court Clerk have printed such number of ballots as the governing member of each party thought would be necessary.

Each Judge holds that his court has jurisdiction in the matter, and each says its orders must be obeyed by the clerk. Judge Tartar, in defending his course before Circuit Judge Bethurum, before whom the case was argued, said his orders would be carried out if he had to call out the State militia.

Judge Bethurum, in rendering his decision, said that the records showed, and he knew, that a greater part of the Republicans who voted with the Progressive party last November had no idea of leaving the Republican party, and wanted to vote this year in the Republican primary and if only 50 per cent more ballots were distributed than were cast last election that hundreds of voters would be disfranchised.

Blufe Kirtley and family, Miss Blanche Kirtley and Cal Young, of Ludlow, left Sunday for a trip up Kentucky river in a gasoline launch.

Rev. Hensley and wife were called to Texas the first of the week by the serious illness of the Reverends mother, Mrs. S. A. Hensley.

Miss Hester North and two girl friends, of Aurora, were guests of the former's grandmother Mrs. Mary E. O'Neal, of East Bend, the past week.

Will Rice marketed lot of fine blackberries in Aurora the past two weeks. He had a fine prospect but the dry weather has killed the late ones.

There is strong talk of putting all the river road on R. D. 1 above high water mark. No one can estimate the advantage this would be to the residents of that territory.

The weather remains very dry and tobacco and corn are firing badly. Unless rain falls here in the next three days one half a crop is all that can be expected.

We hear that Hogan and Stanley Ryle, of near the mouth of Gunpowder, have a fine crop of corn and tobacco. The drouth does not effect that region like it does in the hills.

Belleview defeated Rising Sun at the park here Saturday by a score of 10 to 5. Bobby Brady's batting was a feature, getting three hits and two walks in five times up. Lostutter pitched for the Sunners and Rogers for the locals.

The dry weather is playing havoc with the crops on R. D. 1. A few more days of dry weather and the corn crop will be a total failure. This does not apply to the territory above town as they had a soaking rain last Sunday.

Last Friday when we made our rounds and reached Mr. Pete Hager's home his little grandson was waiting for the mail and presented us with about one half peck of as fine peaches as we have seen this year. The carrier's monotonous work is made much lighter by such kindness.

Stanley Clore's mare which had a young colt by her side had to be killed. She had been on pasture and had dry weeds and grass lodged in her throat and was starving to death. After the shooting she was cut open and it was found that gangrene had set up in the place. A. S. Burcham is raising the colt on condensed milk.

Frank Scott and J. J. Stephens had a force of hands at work on the roads on R. D. 1 the past week. We would like to suggest that what money is used on the East Bend roads that were covered by the flood be used to open up the ditches first and then put metal on the road at the "slip," as this is going to be one of the bad places next winter. Let us have that bond issue for road purposes as soon as possible.

Bad Eggs.

The bad eggs we wish to talk about at present are of two kinds. The first of these are hen eggs of which we are getting our share of at the store as nearly fifty per cent of the eggs received are rotten. The rotten egg market in Owenton is over run and we hope this little suggestion will be heeded by our beloved church going friends and customers who insist upon glutting the market with this kind of hen fruit. The second class of bad eggs we wish to talk about are those bad eggs who bring these bad eggs to market.

We have more than once had a whole setting of bad eggs brought us at one time and the bad eggs who brought these bad eggs were worse than the eggs they brought. The bad eggs who brought these bad eggs were considered by some to be very honest people (?) and looked upon as they think to good people as a class. We believe that these bad eggs who bring the bad eggs to the market are not honest or straight and might as well get your money and goods some other dishonest way.—Owen County Democrat.

Harrodsburg has some pretty little girls who are daubing red paint on their cheeks which doesn't deceive anybody and surely looks like painting the lilly and adorning the rose. Just the beauty of youth, innocence and cleanliness is far more attractive than the red smear affected some times with good reason by women on the faded side of 30.—Harrodsburg Herald.

Sheriff Hume arrested Benjamin Fellows, last Monday, at a fishing camp on the river below constance. He is charged by Cincinnati parties with stealing about $150 from a picture show in that city about six months ago. Fellows refused at first to return to Cincinnati without a requisition was granted by the Governor, and he was brought to Burlington and lodged in jail. He remained in jail about three hours when he concluded that he would go back to Cincinnati, and about seven o'clock Sheriff Hume and County Attorney N. E. Riddell left for Cincinnati, where they delivered him to the officers.

The Ivorywood Trading Boat will be at the following landings with a large stock of goods—William Kirtley's Aug. 13 to 15. Hamilton, August 16 to 21.

L. W. MOORE, Prop'r.

One of the most common ailments that hard working people are afflicted with is lame back. Apply Chamberlain's Liniment twice a day and massage the parts thoroughly at each application and you will get quick relief. For sale by J. W. Berkshire & Son and E. E. Kelly.

That uncertain feeling that many people in this county had been experiencing for several weeks previous to last Saturday has been removed. When Vox Populi got a chance it was not in disposing of the candidates.

Aurora and Petersburg were pretty badly shaken up by a wind storm on Wednesday afternoon of last week. Several buildings were injured considerably in each town, but fortunately no person was hurt.

The colored woman, who was robbed of $24.00 in money, last week, recovered about $5 of the money and numerous articles of wearing apparel that the party who stole the money had purchased with a portion of it.

He has never been suspected of being crazy or nutty, but Ransom Ryle went out to milk one morning last week, when he sat down on the bucket and placed the stool under the cow and began milking.

"I was cured of diarrhoea by one dose of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy," writes M. E. Gebhardt, Oriole, Pa. There is nothing better. For sale by J. W. Berkshire & Son and E. E. Kelly.

Elmer Kirkpatrick sold to Joe Eubanks, of Crescent Springs, Kenton county 14 five months old Chesterwhite pigs that averaged about 30 pounds, for $80, being over 18½ cents a pound.

At last reports Mrs. L. H. Kelly, of Waterloo neighborhood, was recovering nicely from the surgical operation to which she submitted a few weeks since.

Jack Eddins sold his Buick auto runabout to N. W. Burkitt, of Union, last week. Mr. Burkitt will use it in carrying the mail from Union to Florence.

The primary election is over and even the candidates are glad, although the results are not what many of them and their friends desired.

Many Cincinnati horses have been put on pasture in the Erlanger neighborhood to await the settlement of the teamsters strike in that city.

Henry, Charles and Wm. Clore went to Cincinnati, last Friday, to visit their brother, Noah, who is ill at one of the hospitals in that city.

The Lawrenceburg fair is in progress this week, and a great many Boone county people will attend tomorrow and next day.

The game of ball advertised for the local park last Saturday afternoon, was called off on account of the primary election.

The dry spell has caught a great deal of corn in the roasting ear when plenty of rain is needed to make the ear.

Those who have been very much afflicted with political walkitis will now recover from it the primary being over.

Misses Bessie Kirkpatrick, Sheba Roberts and Katie Stewart are the operators at the local telephone exchange.

The Christian Bible School Convention will hold an all day meeting at Florence, August 14.

Richard White's hand in which he had blood poison has about ceased to trouble him.

Considerable oil was put on the pike between Erlanger and Covington last week.

The election wise abandoned all their predictions on Friday before the primary.

Personal Mention.

Rupert Rogers is enjoying his big victory in a very becoming manner.

John Errett, of Erlanger, was a guest of Prof. Dix a few days the past week.

Miss Goldie McCool, of Idlewild neighborhood, is the guest of Miss Katie Stewart.

A lack of votes played havoc with the expectations of many of the candidates.

Mr. and Mrs. G. S. Bohanon, of Versailles, are the guests of their daughter, Mrs. V. O. Keys.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Coffman, of Verona, were guests of W. R. Rogers and wife, last Sunday.

William Duncan spent last Saturday and Sunday with his parents, Dr. and Mrs. E. W. Duncan

O. O. Dixon has returned from Ryle, Ky., where he had been nursing Jerdie Harris, thru a severe case of typhoid fever.

Mrs. F. P. Walton, of Covington, has been the guest of her sister, Mrs. Eliza Rouse, the past week.

C. G. Smith, of Hebron neighborhood, was a business visitor to Burlington, one day the past week.

Howe, for Commonwealth's Attorney, carried every county in the district by a handsome majority.

Congressman A. B. Rouse and wife left last Sunday for Washington, D. C., to remain until Congress adjourns.

The Recorder does not carry the picture of the circuit and county clerk nominees, not having them in the office.

W. Lee Gaines, his son and daughter and Mrs. Hicks, of Walton, were Sunday guests of Mr. and Mrs. Legrand Gaines.

Rankin Revill and wife, of Frankfort, were guests of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Revill, a few days the past week.

Several of the candidates at last Saturday's primary, who were defeated, were in Burlington, Monday, looking none the worse for their defeat.

Earl Smith and Herbert Kirkpatrick made a trip on political business to Rabbit Hash, last Thursday—they took the ballot book for that precinct.

Wilber Kelly, who is attending commercial school in the city spent last Saturday and Sunday with his parents Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Kelly near town.

J. M. Barlow, of Pleasant Valley neighborhood, was in Burlington last Friday, and some do say he was setting up political pins for the next day.

Prof. E. L. Dix and wife returned last Wednesday from a visit of two weeks or ten day visit with friends and relatives in the central part of the State.

Courtney Walton, of Idlewild, was in late Friday afternoon, giving the boys the political dope from his neighborhood, and getting in exchange such as the local dopsters had.

J. M. Barlow and W. T. Beemon have announced the celebration of the latter's victory in last Saturday's primary by giving a big fish fry, the date of which will be announced later.

One of W. T. Stott's anti-election promises is, "If I win I will be in Burlington on the first Monday in September with a two horse wagon load of fine watermelons to hand out free."

Owen S. Watts and wife, of St. Cloud, Florida, are in this county to spend a month or six weeks with friends and relatives. Mr. Watts was in town, last Monday and met many of his old friends.

W. W. Gaines, a leading attorney in Atlanta, Georgia, arrived on Wednesday of last week, to spend a few weeks of the belated term with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Geo W. Gaines, of Bullittsville neighborhood.

W. T. Riddell and wife, of Dayton, Ohio, were guests of his brother, M. L. Riddell and wife, of Burlington, one day the past week going from there to the Hebron neighborhood, to visit his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jas. A. Riddell

Mrs. Edgar Berkshire went to Cincinnati last Saturday to attend the funeral of her four year old niece, Helen Fenton, daughter of Sidney Fenton. The child fell out of the third story window last Friday morning and lived only a few hours.

Rev. Edgar D. Jones and family, of Bloomington, Ill., arrived last week on their annual vacational visit with Mrs. Jone's parents, Mr. and Mrs. T. G. Willis, near Idlewild. Rev. Mr. Jones will remain in Boone county till the middle of August, when he goes to Fountain Park, Chautauqua, near Remington, Ind., where he will fill a two weeks' engagement. Rev. Jones is now in his eighth year as pastor of the First Christian church, Bloomington, Illinois.

Some More Old Trees.

In looking over the Recorder recently I saw mention of a tree of great dimensions in Hebron neighborhood, and it called to mind the big trees on Burlington pike beyond Florence set out by Uncle Joshua Zimmerman about 100 years ago. He said to his friends, "when I die let these trees be my monument. I want no other."

More than 50 years ago Mrs. Harriet Carpenter, first wife of Able Carpenter and her son, Eli, set out the trees in the Christian church yard in Florence, and I feel that those trees are a better monument to her memory than the marble shaft in Florence cemetery. No dobut she looked thru the vista of years and felt the noble branches of those trees would shade the house of God where her grandchildren would worship at its altar.

To Hurt Your Town.

There are few towns that do not have "knockers" in it. The following rules for injuring your town have been running in several of our exchanges and we believe if they are followed will produce the results for which they are intended:

Fight on streets. Oppose improvements. Mistrust public men. Run the town down to strangers. Go to some other town to trade. Refuse to advertise in your paper. Do not invest a cent; lay out your money somewhere else. Be particular to discredit the motives of public spirited men. Lengthen your face when a stranger speaks of locating in your town. If a man wants to buy your property ask him two prices for it. If he wants anybody's else, interfere and discourage him. Refuse to see the merit in any scheme that does not benefit you. Run down your newspaper. Run down your officers. Run down everything and everybody, but number one. Talk in the barber shops, hotels and other places of how bad times are, of how everybody is going to the "demnition bowwows."

THE ADVANTAGES

Of The Grange to the Farmer and His Family.—A Paper Read at a Meeting of Golden Grange.

I know of no better way by which the farmer may be benefitted than by attending regularly the meetings of the Grange The various subjects that are introduced for discussion, if followed closely and entered into, will prove of untold value. The careful reading of Grange papers will afford material help and cause research that perhaps otherwise would not be made. By the discussion of various crops raised the kinds of seed, the different kinds of machinery needed on the farm, much in formation may be obtained by the farmer, and as that must be his vocation thru life, naturally, all information is helpful toward the performance of his duties. Morally, the Grange takes a front seat. Its principles are the purest, honesty is inculcated; charity is urged; temperance thoroughly advocated. Its doors are open only to the good, honest and upright. The careful study of its ritual, the exemplification of its beautiful degrees cannot fail to make deep and lasting impressions on the hearts of men and women, thus urging them on to nobler lives. Socially, its advantages are unsurpassed by any organization. The mingling together with good men and women, whom we learn to love and trust the interchanging of ideas concerning the home; the refreshments often prepared—all have a tendency toward higher and better ideas. Educationally the Grange offer opportunities unlimited. The readings, recitations, papers, debates, the summing up of current events, the annual visit to State or National meetings are of benefit both to young and old. Financially the Grange is constantly offering benefits to its patrons thru its co-operative feature if only put in practice by its members. Shame upon us that we pay so little attention to this part which might be made so valuable by taking in nearly nearly every necessity to the home and farm. Fraternally we turn with pride to our organization which can join hand in hand, husband wife, child and neighbor in one mighty throng, with generous hearts and open hands to help the needy, raise the fallen, thus constantly striving to uplift humanity. Let us not, dear patrons, fail to make and keep the good resolution to attend more faithfully than ever before our meetings, that the Grange may be made stronger and the world be better by its existence, remembering that, "amid all that is bright and beautiful in nature, there is nothing that blooms with such unfading color, no perfume on earth fraught with such fragrance as the flowers of good works and the sweet smelling savor of that pity which feels for the want and relieves the distresses of our sisters and brothers.

A Gold Mine on Every Farm.

Every farm has not a gold mine, but every farm can have one. A field of alfalfa is a veritable gold mine, and there are few farms south of the Ohio river on which alfalfa will not grow. We doubt if there is a single one that has not one acre at least that can be made to grow this greatest of clovers. Where corn or cotton or cow peas will grow alfalfa can be made to flourish. Besides, one planting of alfalfa will last from five to 15 years, and all the time the land is growing richer instead of poorer. Alfalfa adds nitrogen to the soil faster and in greater quantity than any other crop, while corn and cotton deplete the land of this element, making it poorer every year.

New Method of Fertilizing Trees

Just now foreign horticulturists are considerably wrought up over a new method of fertilizing fruit trees and experiments made thus far seem to show that there is much merit in the plan. Under this method holes from four to five inches deep are dug 20 inches apart throughout the orchard. In these 40 grams of fertilizer, containing 20 gramms of superphosphate, 10 gramms of nitrate of soda, and 10 gramms of muriate of potash was placed in each hole. The experiments as conducted at four different places all showed an increased vigor for both young and old trees and greater fruit production on bearing trees.

Among the advantages pointed out of this method of fertilizing are the rapidity and economy of application, the possibility of renovating orchards growing in sod without plowing, avoidance of mechanical injury to tree roots, and the application of fertilizer in the immediate vicinity of the feeding roots.

Eight Million Head of Beef Slanghfered In U. S. last Year.

Those calves were every one needed either to grow in mature beef or to replenish the breeding stock. We cant afford to let this condition of things persist. We have got to stop killing off the calves and we have got to re-stock our farms. The big ranches are done. The areas are cut up into smaller farms as was inevitable with the increase in population. We can no longer look to them for the beef supply we must have. We must depend upon the farmer who keeps only a few head. Now is his great chance. The demand is here and there is no sign of its abating. Prices can't drop very much for years to come unless a radical change is wrought the world over a very unlikely hypothesis. The farmer of the south is facing the biggest opportunity he will ever have in the live stock business. —Southern Agriculturiist.

WIRELESS KEPT OFF SHOWERS

Not a Drop of Rain in Sayville. While Other Towns Are Leluged.

New York, July 30.—The fact that the Long Island village of Sayville has been deprived of the recent thunder showers, which have visited this vicinity, is attributed by some of the disappointed truck gardeners to the effect which the large wireless station there may have upon atmospheric conditions. There has been no rain at Sayville for more than six weeks and a withering drouth is reported, while towns all around there have had a number of heavy downpours.

The wireless plant at Sayville is one of the most powerful in the world, having a main shaft 500 feet high, to which are attached hundreds of wires. Farmers who have inquired of the radio inspection bureau of the Department of Commerce and Labor as to whether wireless plants deflect thunder showers, learn that if such is the case, the instance at Sayville is the first time that such an effect has been reported.

The Western railroads spend thousands each year to induce farmers to settle on raw lands in an untried country. Why would it not be possible for the railroads of this State to develop a spirit of enterprise among the farmers along their lines which would enable them to put their labor upon a more profitable basis? Given the right shipping facilities there is no reason why fruit growing and vegetable gardening should not supersede the wholesale destruction of trees and timber.—Lexington Tribune.

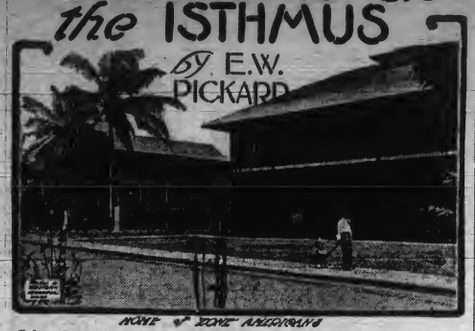
The Panama Canal
and the
Isthmus in History and Romance

By Edward W. Pickard



Mr. Pickard is that type of globe-trotting author who seeks the quaint and curious places and people as subjects for his clever descriptive articles. In his present series of twelve articles which we have arranged to print, he has touched not only the actual work of building the canal, and the people who have accomplished it, but has gone into what the newspaper worker knows as the side lines, and which as a rule are of as much interest as the main story. This is particularly true in this case. After our readers have completed the last of Mr. Pickard's articles they will have a better understanding of the Panama Canal, and conditions within and surrounding the canal zone.

AMERICANS on the ISTHMUS

by E.W. PICKARD

HOME OF SOME AMERICANS

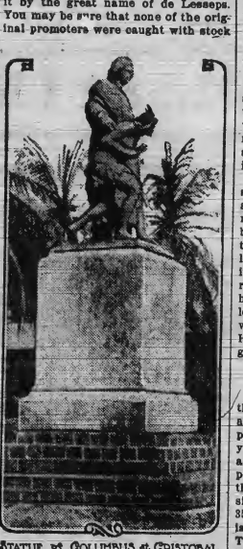
Colon, C. Z.—"The engineer's dream of the centuries has been realized." Everyone who writes of the Panama canal feels bound to use that phrase, and though it is trite, it is no less true.

Possibly when Balboa first stood on the "Peak of Darien" and gazed entranced at the waters of what he called the Southern sea the thought of cutting through the isthmus came to him. Certainly, within three years after his great discovery or in 1516, he had transported two ships, in pieces, across from the Atlantic to the Pacific and there put them together.

It could not have been very much later that the idea of an isthmian canal was born, for during the reign of Philip II. of Spain (1556-1598) the Inquisition declared that any such project to alter the face of the earth was impious, and the Spanish ruler forbade its further discussion. The ban of the church was effective for some time, but in 1699 a Scotchman of the name of Patterson revived the scheme, established a colony on the shores of the isthmus and even made a crude survey of the proposed route. Caledonian bay, on the north shore of Panama, alone preserves the memory of that attempt. French scientists in 1735 advocated a Nicaragua canal, fifty years later the Spanish government ordered a survey of the Darien route, and early in the nineteeth century von Humboldt declared a canal was practicable. In 1825, immediately after Latin America had freed itself from Spain, the Central American and United States Atlantic and Pacific Canal company was organized, and one of the directors of the concern with the high-sounding name was DeWitt Clinton. Various schemes were started and fell through, and in 1835 the United States senate voted for the building of a Nicaragua canal. An expedition was sent to that country and reported that the canal could be constructed at a cost of $25,000,000.

After the Clyal war there was much negotiating by our government for a canal concession, but when the Nicaragua route seemed to be the favorite the Bogota government became impatient and gave the concession for a Panama canal to Lucien Napoleon Bonaparte Wyse, a French lieutenant. He made some maps and organized a company which sold out to the financiers with whom Ferdinand de Lesseps had associated himself.

Albert Edwards in his admirable book on Panama thus describes the beginning of the tragedy of de Lesseps and his company:



"The digging of the Suez canal was the accomplishment of his life. All his vigor and energy had gone into it. He came back to Paris literally carried on the shoulders of his nation. The government made him a 'comte' and the people called him 'le grand Francais.' But he fell among thieves. The old man tumbled blindly into the trap of speculators, who foresaw a rich harvest in the drawing together of his great name and the shady concession of Lieutenant Wyse. They set the stage by summoning the scientists of the world to a great congress to discuss an Atlantic-Pacific canal. Although it was called a 'scientific' congress, most of its 136 members were speculators and politicians. Only forty-two were engineers or geographers. They elected Count de Lesseps, railroaded through a resolution that the Panama route was the only practicable one, and formed the Universal Interoceanic Canal company by buying the Wyse concession for 10,000,000 francs, before the bona fide members of the congress knew what had happened and in the face of much protest. There can be little doubt that the congress was packed like a ward caucus, but there is no evidence that de Lesseps realized that it was.

"The company was launched with many banquets, florid speeches by le grand Francais, and champagne without end. And all the time those who were on the inside were playing the market from both ends, sending the stocks tumbling down the steps of the bourse on a manufactured report that the United States was again waving the Monroe Doctrine, shooting them up again with a misquotation from the president's message to the effect that we were enthusiastic in favor of the French enterprise. A sorrier exhibition of conscienceless finance has seldom been seen."

Old de Lesseps, however, was in earnest. He sent over engineers who discovered that Wyse's maps were inaccurate and that yellow fever was deadly. Then in December, 1879, the count himself, with his wife and three children, arrived from France. After receptions and speech-making in Colon he crossed to Panama, and there, on January 1, 1880, the formal opening of the canal was performed with elaborate ceremony. Mlle. Ferdinande de Lesseps struck the first blow of a pick-ax at the point where the canal was to enter the Pacific, each of the party followed with a blow, and there was a vast quantity of applause and champagne.

From the very first the French company was beset with troubles. As the canal was not a government undertaking the work had to be let out to contractors, and many of these proved to be dishonest. They would take out the soft dirt, collect the stipulated price per cubic yard, and then go into bankruptcy. At Bogota the politicians not only exacted the usual blackmail, but annoyed the company with all manner of litigation, the native courts invariably ruling against the French. Worst of all, perhaps, were the yellow fever and malaria, which killed off the engineers and laborers by the thousand. In the last three months of 1884 the death rate per thousand was nearly 100, and in September, 1885, it reached 176.97. Sanitary science had not yet learned how to cope with these diseases, and there is every reason to believe that their ravages alone would have been enough to insure the failure of de Lesseps' enterprise, without the gross extravagance and the dishonesty that characterized the work.

"The crash came in 1888," says Mr. Edwards. "After eight years of as brave a fight as man had ever made against nature, the bubble burst. It is estimated that stock had been issued to the value of two hundred and fifty million dollars. It is doubtful if half this sum ever got near enough to Panama to be expended on actual work. Most of this paper was held by French peasants and people of moderate means. They had been led into it by the great name of de Lesseps. You may be sure that none of the original promoters were caught with stock on their hands when the final break came. The scandal was immense. Many government officials were involved. The shame of it drove the old man—le Grand Francais—insane. He died a few years later in an asylum."

The company went into the hands of a receiver who organized the New French Canal company, and this concern sold all its rights and property to the United States in 1902. Many of its buildings, ranging in size from de Lesseps' palace in Cristobal to houses for laborers, were found worth preserving and have been used by the Americans. The hospital buildings at Ancon and Colon were nearly all erected by the French.

When Uncle Sam took hold of the canal work, the jungle all along the route across the isthmus was found full of expensive machinery abandoned to the ravages of rust and decay. Much of this was recovered and used in the earlier years of the American regime, and even now French dredges and locomotives may be seen at work there. Nearly all the old French equipment, however, has been sold to a Chicago wrecking concern which has been piling it up in orderly heaps and disposing of it as scrap.

Two parts of the actual work done on the canal by the French have proved of great help to the Americans. These were the dredging at the Atlantic entrance and the dry excavation in the Culebra cut.

COOP FOR BROODY HENS

Swinging Affair Will Accommodate Five Birds Without Crowding and Insures Quick Results.

(By W. R. GILBERT.)

The annexed diagram illustrates a coop designed to cure broodiness in hens. It is easily made, all that is required being two box ends about three feet square, and some ordinary laths.

The mode of construction is as follows: Stand the box ends up and nail on laths 2½ inches apart for the bottom and two sides—the top is covered with canvas, tacked along one edge and tied on the other.

This curtain is raised when the intended sitters are placed in the coop, or when they are removed later. Now bore a hole in the ends a trifle above the center, and pass a pole or piece of pipe through. The ends of the pipe should extend about one foot beyond the coop. The coop is one lath long, or four feet. It is now ready to hang by dropping the ends into two forked posts. It is impossible for a hen to sit on the slatted bottom. If she tries it, the rocking and the tipping of the coop make her give it up in disgust.

The only steady thing about the coop is the pole passing through the center, and the most persistent broody hen is usually glad to roost on it the first night. When a hen has perched for two nights, she may be considered cured. The coop will accommodate four or five hens without crowding, and insures quick results.

FEEDING SILAGE IN SUMMER

Cows May Be Maintained More Cheaply Than Can Through Hot Season on Bluegrass Pasture.

Dean Mumford of the Missouri College of Agriculture makes the statement that cows can be maintained more cheaply on silage than they can be carried through the summer on bluegrass pasture, where the land costs about $100 per acre and is suitable for growing corn.

He says that there is very little pasture land where a cow and a calf can be pastured on less than one and one-half acres, but it is entirely possible to get 12½ to 20 tons of silage from one acre. A cow and her calf can be carried through the summer on two pounds of clover hay and 35 pounds of silage per day as well or better than on bluegrass pasture. Thus he declares that you can carry a cow and her calf six months on less than a half acre of silage.

The good dairy cow has a broad forehead, indicating intelligence and a kindly disposition. She has a short thin neck, not at all beefy, in which veins are plainly manifest. She is narrow through the front shoulders and thick chested, indicating good lung capacity.

She has a large, well-rounded stomach, showing capacity for storage of food and water, from which milk is to be manufactured. She has broad hips and a good width through the flanks, giving plenty of room for lacteal organs. There is also a gentle incline from her shoulders to her rump. The udder is large and soft, hanging down well between her hind legs and extending forward and backward in a well-balanced proportion. Her legs are short and her hair is a glossy color.

Losses of Sheep.

Losses of sheep from disease during the past year are estimated to be about 24.6 per thousand, which compares with 26.6 similarly estimated a year ago and 25.5, the ten-year average of such losses. Losses from exposure are estimated to be 25.1 per thousand, which compares with 46.6 similarly estimated a year ago and 35.6, the ten-year average. The year is thus seen to have been favorable. The total losses per thousand, from both disease and exposure, if applied to the approximate numbers and values on January 1, would indicate a loss of about 2,559,000 head, at $3.94, a total of $10,082,000.

Value of Pump Engine.

When we consider how the pump engine furnishes the stock with water whether the wind is blowing or not, costs less for repairs, never blows down and ruins itself or kills valuable animals, always supplies water at the proper temperature, summer and winter—and a dozen other advantages over the wind mill, we wonder why any intelligent farmer will be without one of these money-making machines.

Hedge is Comfortable.

A good hedge on the west and south of the paddocks and farmstead makes it more comfortable for stock and man. Willow, ash and Norway poplar make good quick-growing wind-breaks. Elm, hackberry, and among evergreens, the spruce, make slower-growing but longer-lived windbreaks.

Weedy Pastures.

Pastures weedy? Good time now to cut them over. If you can't drive a mower over them, take a scythe and stick right to it till you have made a thorough job of it.

Age for Breeding.

There is not much gain in breeding a heifer before she is eighteen months old, but there is considerable risk.

SPECIAL NOTICE

To My Friends and Patrons and The Public at Large.

I have perfected a system for repairing Buggies and Vehicles of all kinds whereby the work is better than ever, wearing longer, holding the luster just twice as long as the usual way of repairing. Another great advantage whereby it is far ahead of the old way is that I use no water on any part of the body or gear until the job is in the last coat of rubbing varnish, and by that time I have all parts of the body well protected, where in doing work the old way we rub with a rubbing stone out of water, called Filler, thereby letting the water get between the pannel of the body and the sill, loosening the plugs, rusting the screws and causing plugs to come out. That is why your pannels break in corners and come loose—water gets in and destroys the glue, letting the water stand there by rotting the wood.

Recollect I have been in the Carriage Business for 35 years, and have made it a life study. I have been working on my Dry System for the last four years and now have it perfected. While there is more work attached to my system and material is more in cost, my price for a Buggy still remains the same—$12.00 for a first-class job of painting and guaranteed to be such. If you want something cheaper in painting I will do it for you but at you risk.

Kelly Rubber Tires.

I have just bought a full supply of the Kelly Springfield Rubber Tires and am prepared to supply your wants at a moment's notice. I have 2,000 pounds now ready to put on while you wait for them at prices to suit everybody that wants a high-grade tire for just the same money they pay other people for a cheap grade. Of course you know I am prepared to do anything for you in the carriage maker's line. Come and see me and get prices and I'll assure you you will go home convinced you have been treated alright.

N. B.—I guarantee the Kelly Tire to be first quality—not second or third grade, and wear twice as long as anyother make of tire.

Yours respectfully,

H. G. COLLINS, Erlanger, Ky.

Editor of Louisville Times Claims the World Should Known of Deaton and Johnson Conviction.

Writing editorially in the Louisville Times, Col. Robert McBride, the Henry Waterson, of the Times says:

The news from Washington, from Mexico, from the Balkins and elsewhere far afield has been of such real and diversified interest as to cause the fact, that Andrew Johnson and Fletcher Deaton have been convicted by a Clark county jury of complicity in the assassination of Deacon Callahan and sentenced to life imprisonment to be almost overlooked. And yet, the jury's action means much to Kentucky and to that section in which Kentucky's richest resources are awaiting development.

It has been a full ten years since Marcum was shot down in the doorway of Breathitt county's court house. The conviction of Fletcher Deaton is the first in all that time of any one of the real leaders in the feud which has taken so heavy a toll of the lives of Breathitt county's people. Curt Jett, it is true, has for some years been an inmate of the Frankfort penitentiary, but Curt Jett was merely a tool in stronger hands, as was Andrew Johnson when the death of Callahan brought feud to a temporary close for want of material for murder.

The conviction of Deaton is directly traceable to the action of Judge Benton in having indictments for perjury returned against lying witnesses in the trials begun before him almost a year ago. It has taken time, patience and courage to convince the feudists that perjury is neither a pastime nor a profession, but an offense punishable with imprisonment. Now that the fact has been driven home, the defense in what may be hoped to be the last of the feud cases has crumbled and convictions have followed fast.

Judge Benton, in putting an end to the system of perjury by which the feud leaders for ten years have escaped justice, has done Eastern Kentucky and the state at large a service long imperatively needed.

A View of Farming or Poorly Kept Farms.

Starting life as a farmer upon a poor worn out farm. Mr. Farmer how would you begin? For several days our business caused us to drive over the country and as we traveled along being interested, we studied the methods and noted the mistakes of the different land holders. In our company was a traveling man from Hillsboro, Ohio, and it did us good to listen the wisdom of the different suggestions made by this gentleman from the Buckeye state. For instance one thing which seemed to worry him most as we covered the country south west of town were the many fields covered with briars and bushes on which you could notice around the edges where sun could get in the blue grass and red clover was growing in abundance, ehowing what the land would do if given an opportunity.

We saw fence rows which covered a space of 18 to 20 feet in undergrowth, rich in foliage proving that this ground would grow anything. We saw barns filled with manure and plowed fields with worn places in them in a stones throw of these barns. We saw clover meadows and timothy filled with rocks, stumps and bushes with no preparation for mowing. We saw mowers and rakes right where they were left last fall. We saw metal roofs and houses ruined for a few dollars worth of paint and a little work and we met several farmers fox hunting and others going fishing.

We have a country covered with limestone rock and from and from what we saw growing we believe that with proper care the land will grow anything. We saw very few hogs and cattle and in one place we saw one field with sheep and horses upon it and no fences and we supposed that upon this boundary of probably a hundred acres the stock were herded tho we saw no shepherd. We saw very few good gardens or preparations for truck patches yet we heard considerable grumbling from the inhabitants about the high cost of living. The man from the Buckeye state said that with a change in the methods of farming these poor farms covered with clover and grass instead of sassafras, briars and broken down fences would be the greatest and prettiest country in the world. He was more than delighted with some farms. We agreed with the stranger and believe that if covered with waving blue grass and lowing herds with farms well cleaned and fenced it would be the prettiest country in the world. —Owen County Democrat.

Every man ought to be proud of his country and no man should be too proud to work for it.

down a chick's throat cures Gapes. A few drops in the drinking water Cures and Prevents White Diarrhoea, Cholera, Limberneck, Roup and other Infectious Diseases.

MRS. W. R. GUNTER, of Concord, Va., writes: "My chickens had gapes so bad last summer that I could not raise any until I got this medicine. It is the best poultry remedy I ever used."

MRS. SARAH WELLS, of Lyons, Ind., writes: "It beats anything I ever tried for gapes. I just put it in the feed and drinking water and the chicks get well."

MRS. W. P. BRACEY, of Baskersville, Va., writes: "I have now used this medicine two years and I just could not raise any chickens without it. I have not had a case of gapes since I began using it."

MRS. W. R. VEDDER, of Catskill, New York, writes: "I have not lost a turkey since I began using it. I had fifty and had used most everything else and lost all but thirty when I heard of this remedy."

WHITE HOUSE POULTRY FARM, of Buechel, Ky., writes: "We tried it on roup and gapes and it knocked these diseases out of existence in three days. It gives the chicks life and vigor and pulls them through the critical stage in fine shape."

Investigation of Market Prices.

The Department of Agriculture is about to start an investigation of market prices for farm products. Several specialists are to be put on the job. They will make a study of producing and marketing conditions with a view to seeing whether it is practicable to establish a market news service dealing with perishable goods.

At the same time, investigations will be made in the line of co-operative buying and selling to see whether sellers' organizations can be formed and whether co-operative stores for food products can be made practical.

The employees of the Government in Washington made a trial of a co-operative store a few years ago, but it eventually failed, it being claimed that there was mismanagement and others declaring that the plan was killed by the opposition of some local retail merchants.

The investigations of the Department will take a wide range, covering railroad rates routing of products, and similar problems. Incidentaly, efforts will be made to utilize by-products that are now wanted so as to give a greater return to the producer for a given crop.

Marriage and Insanity.

A correspondent wants to know if those who are tainted with insanity can legally marry. We are tempted to say "yes" and have done with it, but there is more in this than meets the eye and it is well to be careful.

In a broad and general way it is quite legal for those who are tainted with insanity to marry. In point of fact they are about the only ones who do marry. But if you discover after you are married that your wife is insane —and you will discover this in about two months—you can then nullify the marriage on the grounds that a vital fact was concealed from you. She on her part will plead that her insanity was obvious, seeing that she married you, which no sane person would have done, and that therefore there was no concealment. Or she will pay $1,000 to a distinguished alienist and a credit to his union who will swear that she is not insane and that will put you to the expense of paying a like amount, or more, to a nother distinguished alienist and equally an honor to his union who will swear that she is insane. You will see that the matter is beset with difficulties and not nearly so simple as it seems. Arguing prima facie you were both insane for even thinking of getting married under any circumstances, and the fact of your own sanity would seriously damage your case. You will be a sort of accessory before the fact, and in a sense particeps criminis. But you may still argue that your wife was more insane than you, as otherwise she would not have made so bad a choice, and you will find that here, at least, the Court is enthusiastically with you. But whether a mere preponderance of insanity without the element of concealment would be enough to secure the annulment of the marriage is a nice point and one that we do not feel ourselves competent to settle. Why feel ourselves competent to settle. Why not make it up?—Argonaut.

Giving the Cow a Chance.

The cows of the states of Iowa, Nebraska and Minnesota produced last year on the average about 140 lbs. of butterfat. Ninety per cent of the farmers of the Mississippi valley will say that their cows are making money, yet they have not kept close enough figures to know which cows are making the most or which cow does not even pay her board. With figures this low, it is plain to see that the so-called average cow of the Middle West hardly more than pays for her keep, to say nothing of the 150 hours of human labor required to milk her each year. There are a few herds throughout the country that are averaging close to 450 pounds of fat per cow annually, and there are a considerable number of other herds averaging about 300 lbs. per cow, but on the other hand more than 80 per cent of the dairy herds are averaging less than 150 lbs. of fat each year.

The farmers who own 150 lb. cows are spending just as much time milking their cows and almost as much money for feed and realizing less than one-fourth as much profit as the man who milks 350 lb. cows.

Perhaps the reason why so many of our cows are actual money losers is not the cow's fault, but the fault of her owner. If the averaged cow owned over the country is given a fair chance she will prove herself a profit maker. For example: not many years ago a banker in the southeastern part of Iowa decided to go into the dairy business. Having been a business man in the city all his life, he knew practically nothing about the relative merits of a good and a poor cow. Neither did he know much about the care and feeding of a dairy herd. He however, took a great interest in his herd and realized the importance of good management. The first year by feeding and managing the best he knew how, he was able to clear $325 from 20 cows. The average fat production per cow for this first year was 168 lbs. Eight years have elapsed since this man made his first venture in the dairy business. His herd has increased to 100 milch cows and by use of the scale and the Babcock test, he has increased the average yearly production from 168 lbs. to 287 lbs., an increase of more than 70 per cent. More than 50 per cent of the stock at present in the herd are descendants of the original 20 head This is an example of what we call "Giving the Cow a Chance." That she will respond has been demonstrated beyond a doubt in at least the instance of this men to whom we have occasion to refer.

We now need safe and sane auto driving throughout the country as much as we need a safe and sane Fourth of July—more so, according to frequency of the event. Let the autoists join with the common citizenship in the accomplishment of this good purpose. —Hartford Herald.

STATE AID FOR ROADS NOTHING NEW.

"Seems to me the country's gone mad about taxes," exclaimed one of the men at the store.

"That's right. I saw an article in our country paper about a new tax for State aid for road building. It read mighty fine, but I smelled higher taxes behind it O, K.

"I sometimes wish I had been born seventy-five years ago, before State aid and lots of fool tax schemes got started. What do you say, Uncle Bill?"

The old gentleman addressed smiled good humoredly, scratched his bald spot and narrowed his pale-gray eyes before he said. "Well, I don't know. You youngsters always talk about things as if they were bran new."

"Well, Uncle Bill, I never heard of State aid for roads in Kentucky before did you?"

"There's a thousand and one things you ain't heard of, I reckon I know one thing for sure, and that is that the pike that runs from Maysville to Lexington was built with State aid money all right."

"Is that so?"

"Sure it's so. Why in 1831 the State voted money for building hard roads. The State employed an engineer and a whole lot of other men, and they built some fine roads. 'Course I ain't old enough to remember all this; but I've heard men talk that helped build that road. You see, State aid is eighty-two years old, any way; and I reckon it's a sight older than that."

"Uncle Bill, how much money did Kentucky, the State of Kentucky, pay on that road from Maysville to Lexington?"

"It was $213,200 in six years, and in that time they built sixty four miles of road."

"Did that $213,200 foot the whole bill for that road?"

"Nope. That was just about one-half of the cost. Roads came high then, because all the metal on the road was hand broke; and the blasting out of that metal had to be done with old fashioned tools and black powder. You can figure that out, and you'll find that road cost almost $6.700 to build."

"Gee whiz! We could build a road like that now for about $4,050, couldn't we?"

"Sure we could. I tell you, fellers folks is always growling, and I reckon they always will, especially about taxes."

"But, Uncle Bill, you forget we have county engineers and a State engineer and a lot of office holders and experts and things to pay without State aid."

"There you go again. What'd I tell you about folks grumbling? Why in 1837 the chief engineer got a salary of $5,000 and he had two assistant engineers at $3,000 each. Besides there were nine other experts, who got among them $13,500. So you see, seventy-six years ago this State paid in salaries for men to develop, inspect and construct roads $24,500. I reckon you'll agree with me that these men built some good roads, all right?"

"Yes, they did, and the roads are still fine."

"Didn't they make your land and mine worth more money?"

"Yes."

"Now listen to me. Don't get in the habit of grumbling about a tax just because it is a tax. If it will make land more valuable, don't say a word. If you must grumble, grumble when you're sure a tax ain't being spent right; but don't grumble because it is a tax."—Ex.

TO THE CHRISTIAN CHUCH EVERYWHERE.

"It is time something besides parading and singing, 'Onward, Christian Soldiers,' was done by the Christian people," said, the Hon. John Wanamaker in an address delivered on Temperance Sunday, in a Philadelphia church. "We must now stand together for the total abolition of the liquor traffic, which is bound to come in time. I believe that the Republican party, or any party that fails to recognize this fact, is doomed. I am a Republican, and I love the old party of Linbolin, Harrison, Grant, Garfield and McKinley, but I realize that the grand old party cannot be kept up to its standard until it excludes the liquor business. It was difficult for me when I lived in Washington to entertain foreign officials without serving them with strong drink, but none of them ever had anything to drink at my house. I have been a teetotaler since 1877. The appetite for strong drink is an appetite that grows. It is the Devil's best weapon the the world's greatest curse."

Abraham Lincoln laid down the proposition, "We want those who think slavery is wrong to stop voting with those who think it is right." We face similar conditions on another great moral issue today. Nothing else will cope with the situation but our open and honest contention that we want those who think liquor selling is wrong to stop voting with those who thing it is right.

An Entertaining Mouse.

At a late hour on Wednesday night of last week, J. C. Revill and family were disturbed by sounds eminating from the piano in the parlor. Of course it was supposed that some person was responsible for the instrument sending forth a noise, and an investigation was started to ascertain who the performer was. Each member of the family soon established an alibi, when a visit was made to the parlor but with out results. Shortly after the household had resumed the quiet usual at the midnight hour, the piano was heard again, this time the treble being the leading key. The parlor was visited again by members of the family, but no cause for the instruments performance could be discovered even though the key board was removed to see if a mouse had taken up its abode in the piano, but nothing to indicate the presence of the little animal was discovered, and the mystery is yet unsolved.

The Farmer.

The farmer is in the strong glare of public aid and counsel at the present moment for sure, and if he survives the propogandist, he will have smooth sailing into the harbor of wealth, because there is not a shadow of doubt of the sincerity of all that is being hurled at him. Soil fertility, alfalfa, crop rotation and all and several of the present day preachments are for his good and stock raising for a home market for his products is not the least of the most valuable teachings he is receiving; in fact, we may say it is the most opportune at the moment as live stock of every description is selling at high figures and must continue for a decade or more because at the ratio of increase of population at this date, live stock will be the most profitable output of the American farm for many years, for its own direct profit and its immense value as an adjunct to the farm, enabling the farmer to return to the soil a proper payment for value received.

The Benefits of Spraying.

There are at least two instances of the good results of spraying in Christian county this year that should in themselves be sufficient evidence to anyone who doubts the efficiency of this means of saving fruit and increasing it in quantity, in size, beauty and quality. These two cases are the orchards at the Western Kentucky Hospital and on the farm of W. A. Glass.

Mr. Glass brought in some apples a few days ago that were as pretty and perfect in contour and as lucious as any of the famed fruit of the Western States, and he also presented a basket of peaches that would make Maryland and Georgia ashamed of themselves. He sprayed his orchard and attended to his trees under expert advice and he is now reaping a rich harvest. There are practically no defective or undersize apples in his orchard and his peaches and other fruit are improved in just the same proportion.

Really wonderful results have been accomplished at the Western Kentucky Hospital. For several years there has been an apple orchard, containing about 2,500 trees of the finest varieties, but it has never done much. Usually the crop was about four hundred to five hundred bushels, and it was not anything extra in quality.

But last fall an expert was employed who came here in person and outlined the method in which the trees should be cultivated and fertilized. This was done, the trees were pruned and were sprayed just as he outlined.

And the effect is a revelation. Those trees are now loaded down with fruit of really magnificent proportions. Hundreds of bushels of apples that fell from the trees have been picked up and fed to the patients and it is estimated that from 2,000 to 2,500 bushels will mature and will be put in stock this fall for winter use.—Hopkinsville New Era.

CHURCH NOTICE.

Beginning Sunday evening August 10th, a series of eight days meeting will be held in the Ebenezer Lutheran church.

The meetings will begin promptly at 7:30 p. m., and the pastor will preach on the following subjects:

Sunday August 10.—"A Call to Prayer," Psa. 46:10.
Monday August 11.—"The Two Estates of Man," Luke 16:19-31.
Tuesday August 12.—"The Mediatorial Door," Jno. 10:9.
Wednesday August 13.—"The Armor of Christian Warfare," Eph. 6:10-12.
Thursday August 14.—"Sowing and Reaping," Gal. 6:7, 8.
Friday August 15.—"What True Discipleship Means," Matt. 16:24.
Saturday August 16.—"The Way, the Truth and the Life," Jno. 14:6.
Sunday August 17.—What think Ye of Christ?" Matt 22:42.

These meetings will be open to the public and all in the community are cordially urged to attend. The attendance of all members of the church is especially urged.

Three fine hogs averaging about 175 pounds, the property of Mr. J. T. Holton, were found dead Tuesday afternoon in a lot near the barn on his farm. The hogs had been kept in another lot where they could go into the shade in the heat of the day. It was necessary to turn them into the dry lot where there was no shade. It is supposed that they died from being overheated, as they were apparently in a healthy condition.—Dover News.

It is reported that at two or three places in the county quite a lively time was had the night preceding the primary election. It is strange how some people will become overexcited just about the close of a political campaign.

Jasper Beemon believes that oil could be obtained by sinking a well on his farm in Pleasant Hill neighborhood across Gunpowder creek. From the description of oil fields about which he has read is that upon which he bases his belief.

Acklin Riggs, who was burnt as a result of the motorcycle accident at Ludlow Lagoon on Wednesday night of last week, received his injury, a badly burnt arm, assisting to put out the fire that was consuming one of the cyclist who was killed.

Young Bolander, who was scalded on Monday of last week when his threshing machine engine went thru the bridge at the foot of the Gordon hill near Taylorsport, died of his injuries in a few hours after he reached the hospital in Cincinnati.

The toll gate property at Erlanger and the top of the Willow Run hill on the Covington and Lexington pike was sold at public auction one day last week. The property at Erlanger was bought by J. H. Graves for $1,325 while the other property brought $2,000.

The base ball game between Burlington and Erlanger which was booked for election day was postponed until next Saturday August 9th. Erlanger is much stronger than they were earlier in the season, having secured several new players. A good game is expected. Come out and see it.

Mr. W. S. Gunsalus, a farmer living near Fleming, Pa., says he has used Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy in his family for fourteen years, and that he has found it to be an excellent remedy, and takes pleasure in recommending it. For sale by J. W. Berkshire & Son and E. E. Kelly.

The wheat on the Illinois University Farm has been harvested. The yields this year are unusually irregular, due chiefly to the drought, to injuries by the Hessian fly, and the soil treatment. The soil treatment has shown marked effects. The yields of wheat varied from 11 bushels to 61.8 bushels per acre, an actual difference of a little over fifty bushels.

Chas. Kelly, the leading fruit man in Waterloo neighborhood, came to Burlington one day last week to telephone to a Louisville commission house to ship by boat to him at Belleview a lot of empty barrels in which to ship a lot of apples he had ready for the market. He could not get the barrels from Cincinnati on account of the teamsters' strike.

It will cost Boone county between seventy-five thousand and one hundred thousand dollars to buy the pikes in this county. That much money will have to be invested without the dirt roads being improved in the least, then from whence will come the money with which to improve the dirt roads about the awful condition of which so much has been said during the last few years.

The August term of the Boone Circuit Court will convene next Monday. Sheriff Hume has the grand and petit jurors summoned and all his other business in good shape for the term. Considerable business will be disposed of during the term, but it may be that the petit jurors will have little to do, but it will be well for each juror to be on hand to answer when his name is called Monday morning.

Capt. Bas Fenton sent to the Recorder a few days since a copy of the Cincinnati Daily Enquirer of April 11, 1865. It is a four page sheet of eight narrow columns to the page. It contains several columns of advertisements, each of which is single column measure and set in small type, the display being so modest as to be almost painful. None of the firms advertising in the old paper are doing business now in Cincinnati.

The paper contains the account of the surrender of the Confederate army under Gen. Robert E. Lee on April 9, 1865, and the paper contains numerous notices of times and places for the glorification because of the down-fall of the Confederacy.

The departure of numerous boats from Cincinnati to southern parts was advertised among them the Silver Spray of which W. W. Fenton was captain while H. B. Fenton was one of her cub pilots, and on which he made thirty-seven trips to New Orleans. The old paper is an interesting specimen of war-time journalism and is valued highly by Capt. Fenton.

W. T. STOTT, of Petersburg, Nominee for Representative.

After Election Mints.

Adams proved himself a speeder although his running gear is badly impaired.

The returns do not indicate that Republicans took much of a hand in the primary.

Reports of disorder during last Saturday came in from two or three precincts only.

Cropper got there in pretty good style considering the conditions with which he had to contend.

Riley is the only winner whose majority is expressed by less than three figures although it is a safe one.

It is said that some of the defeated candidates have their hats in the ring for the contest four years hence.

Beemon never got in the danger zone notwithstanding some of his friends were alarmed the last week of the campaign.

Never was there a quieter, nicer election held in Burlington than that of last Saturday. No drinking nor disorder of any kind.

Joe Pugh was nominated by the Kenton county Democrats for Sheriff. John Allison will be his Republican opponent at the regular election next fall.

Rogers proved to be a runner from Runnerville. Stott was known in the canvass as the "old man," but it seems that both the old and the young voters fancied him.

The returns from all the precincts were in by eight o'clock, last Saturday evening, Union being the last to report, but with Union out the winners were so far ahead that the final result was settled.

Chas. Wilson, son of the late Hon. James A. Wilson, won the nomination for Justice of the Peace in the Magisterial District composed of the Carlton and Big Bone precincts. He resides in Carlton precinct.

The vote for Justice of the Peace in the Third Magisterial District, was as follows:

Carlton—Wilson, 64; Adams, 17; Hager, 58.

Big Bone—Wilson, 41; Adams, 46; Wilson's plurality, 23.

Hager, 21.

In the three cornered contest for the Democratic nomination in the Senatorial district composed of Bracken, Grant and Pendleton counties, Hiles won. It was a very hot fight. All the candidates were Bracken county men, it being that county's term to hold the office.

The following candidates had no opposition in the primary election, last Saturday, and they received the following vote:

P. E. Cason, County Judge—1,431.
N. E. Riddell, Co. Atty.—1,452.
Chas. Maurer, Circuit Clerk—1,460.
A. A. Murat, Coroner—1,214.
J. W. Conly, Surveyor—1,224.

Having received a larger per cent of vote cast in his precinct than anyother candidate for assessor in last Saturday's primary I desire to express my gratitude to my home people and at the same time to thank all those in the county who stood to me so loyally at the polls.

W. C. JOHNSON.

A CARD—I wish to thank those who gave me their support in my race for Representative. Although I went down in defeat it was no fault of mine. I am sure I had the race won when the polls opened last Saturday morning, and am sure most of the people know how the trick was done. I made a clean race and am not sorry for anything I did during the campaign. I have no malice towards anyone, and only congratulations for my successor, and wish him success.

G. E. CARROLL.

How Howe Downed Downs.

John J. Howe's majority for Commonwealth's Attorney in this district is in the neighborhood of 3,500. He carried Carroll county by 338 votes, carrying every precinct except Prestonville, which he lost by three votes. The precinct in which both Judge Downs and Howe reside was carried by Howe by a majority of 42. Howe's friends claim that the handsome majority he received at home is quite a feather in his cap. Many of the outside counties having been led to believe that he could not under any circumstances hope to carry his home county.

For You and Your Wife

A cheerful, pretty bedroom will help you to start your day in a cheerful, pleasant mood. Its a haven of rest for you to come back to at night. And all day long its a pleasure to your wife.

To make a pretty bedroom it is more important to have tasteful furniture that harmonizes, than furniture that merely costs a lot. A brass bed, or a pretty iron bed if you prefer, dresser and chiffonier, a low rocking chair and one or two straight back chairs to match, a shirtwaist box, light colored rug on the floor,—all this does not cost very much. IF YOU BUY FROM US, and makes a truly pretty room. Come in and talk it over.

Don't forget to get a STEARNS & FOSTER mattress. That is what makes your bedroom a haven of rest. No other mattress is so comfortable.

RIPENING CREAM ON A FARM

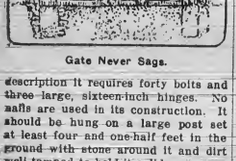
Many Fail to Grasp Principles Underlying Qualities of Good Flavor and Desirable Aroma.

(By G. E. FREVERT, Idaho Experiment Station.)

There is perhaps no other factor in farm butter making that causes more trouble than the lack of proper ripening or souring of the cream. On many farms the ripening is done with no other purposes in view than that of causing the cream to churn more easily.

The object in ripening cream should be to cause the cream to churn more readily, and to produce desirable flavor and aroma. That cream will churn more readily when sour is a fact well known to any one who has had experience in making butter. However, when it comes to the production of good flavor and aroma in the butter, many fail to grasp the principle underlying the production of these good qualities. The main reason why butter fat commands a higher price on the market than other fats is that it has a peculiarly desirable flavor and aroma which cannot be exactly reproduced in other fats. For this reason it is desirable and profitable to develop these qualities in butter to the highest possible degree.

In order to produce desirable flavor it is very essential that the milk and cream be handled under sanitary conditions.



To introduce filth into the cream is to introduce not only the bad flavors which that filth contains, but also germs which will tend to develop some kind of a bad flavor in the cream.

The germs or ferments which produce a clean sour taste in the cream are the ones that will produce a good flavor in the butter. The addition of a small amount of clean tasting sour skim milk or butter milk to the cream about six or eight hours before churning will introduce desirable germs which will sour the cream and at the same time produce desirable flavors in the butter.

GATE IS VERY SATISFACTORY

Iowa Man Has One That Has Never Sagged and is Good as New After Several Years' Service.

Mr. C. A. Wiren of Lucas county, Iowa, sends Iowa Homestead an illustration of a gate that he has had in use on his farm for a number of years and which has never sagged and is as good as new. He says this gate will last twenty years if made right. Stock cannot jump over it nor get their heads through it. It is made of best one-inch hard pine dressed and painted, with the boards mortised in 3x4 white oak pieces and bolted. It is so heavy that it requires two men to hang it, but when hung it is so light that a child can open and close it with ease. According to Mr. Wiren's description it requires forty bolts and three large, sixteen-inch hinges. No nails are used in its construction. It should be hung on a large post set at least four and one-half feet in the ground with stone around it and dirt well tamped to hold it solid.

Gate Never Sags.

SUPERIOR VALUE OF ALFALFA

Evident That Plant Furnishes as Near Perfect Ration as Anything Known to Agriculture.

Evidence accumulates daily of the superior value of alfalfa in the production of both milk and beef. A California Guernsey is reported as producing 444 pounds of butter fat in one year on a ration of alfalfa pasture and hay exclusively, the major portion of the alfalfa fed being hay. It is certain that this Guernsey was a good producer and capable of using her feed economically.

However, regardless of the ability of the cow to convert feed into milk, it is apparent that alfalfa hay and alfalfa as pasture comes as near constituting perfect ration for the dairy cow as anything known to agriculture. In the compounding of dairy rations it has long been regarded as necessary that a variety of feeds be used.

This is in order to increase the palatability and to prevent the animal from tiring of the feed. The fact that an exclusive ration of alfalfa will produce such results as reported in the case of this Guernsey is evidence that alfalfa alone is highly palatable and that it can be used successfully as an exclusive feed.

Give Cows a Rest.

It is well, when possible, to give a cow from six to eight weeks' rest between her periods of lactation, but if it is impossible to dry her off it is better to continue milking than to attempt to force her dry.

REST!

If the doctor says "Tuberculosis," follow exactly his orders in regard to ventilation, food, exercise and rest. He knows better than you do. This is especially true in regard to the rest and exercise, which have to be carefully gauged for each patient and each stage of the disease. Until the disease is checked and marked improvement in general condition and increased weight are noticed, almost absolute rest is essential. The disease is one that destroys the tissues of the body and uses up its energy rapidly. If you persist in using up your energy by work and exercise, the body has nothing left to fight with. Beware what the family medical books prescribe in the way of exercise for consumptives. No one prescription will answer for all cases, and this may be the one where their general prescription will send you to the grave-yard. If your responsibilities seem to make absolute rest for two or three or four months impossible, just remember that the progress of the disease will soon force you to it without the hope of recovery.

DISPENSARIES!

A free dispensary is a place kept open certain hours of the week with a doctor and generally a nurse in attendance for the free examination of those who need its service. People of means ought to go to their physicians and pay the regular fee for such service. Inasmuch as physicians always render their services free to the needy anyway, they generally favor the dispensary as saving time. Sometimes these dispensaries, or clinics, are held for all diseases and sometimes for especial classes of disease, such as tuberculosis, or hook worm, or diseases of the eye, or nose and throat. Such a dispensary is an advantage to the whole community. The needy feel less hesitation about going there when ill than about calling a physician; consequently maladies are often more quickly diagnosed and put under control, and the contagious diseases are then prevented from spreading. Especially in the case of consumption, it is easier to get an examination of the children of the family in a dispensary than it is at home. The accurate information which can be better secured and tabulated in a dispensary than elsewhere is of great service in any general campaign for public health. A free dispensary can be cheaply started and maintained, because physicians are always willing to give an hour or two a week of their time to that work. Are you ready to give a little of your money for it in case one is started in your community?

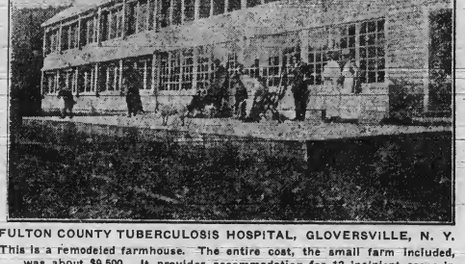
CARE OF THE CONSUMPTIVE

NOT DANGEROUS IN THE HOME IN THE EARLY STAGES OF THE DISEASE.

Important Information Regarding the Proper Care of the Patient—The Use of Material Eating Utensils—Care of the Clothes.



The home care of the consumptive in the beginning stage, under the supervision of a doctor or a nurse, is not dangerous to the other members of the household. The germs of the disease are almost wholly thrown off in the discharges from the mouth and nose, and a uniformly careful collection and destruction of this material will prevent the spread of the germs through the house. The consumptive should spit in a paper box or cloth which can be burned. Paper napkins should be used instead of the ordinary cotton or linen handkerchiefs to wipe the nose and lips, and these napkins should be carefully burned. The consumptive should have his own set of dishes, which should be washed separately in boiling water. His bed and table linen should first be soaked in a disinfecting solution or boiled for half an hour before being washed with the rest of the family laundry. He should wash his hands carefully before and after eating. He should never cough without a paper napkin held to his mouth. He should never kiss another person. These are practically all of the precautions; but they are really so difficult to observe day in and day out that special sanataria for the care of consumptives are almost essential.

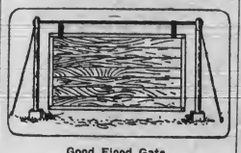
Kentucky Tuberculosis Commission.

ASHAMED!

Lots of people seem proud to have appendicitis or nervous troubles because they think they are fashionable diseases, and are ashamed to be called consumptives because consumption is not fashionable. Feeling this way, they neglect diagnosis and medical care when they first detect the signs of consumption, thinking that, by simple neglect, the disease will disappear of itself. It is well within the truth to say that 5,000 lives are sacrificed annually in the United States through this false pride. The only thing to be ashamed of in having a case of tuberculosis in the family is the neglect of the disease and the consequent death of the sufferer; and such neglect deserves round censure because it will probably involve more than one person. Remember that an early diagnosis of consumption increases the chance of cure a thousand fold.

SMALL COUNTY HOSPITALS PROVDIED FOR KENTUCKY

FULTON COUNTY TUBERCULOSIS HOSPITAL, GLOVERSVILLE, N. Y.
This is a remodeled farmhouse. The entire cost, the small farm included, was about $9,500. It provides accommodation for 13 incipient cases in wards and 4 advanced cases in separate rooms.



The law creating the Kentucky Tuberculosis Commission at the last legislature provides also a plan for the building of small hospitals throughout the state for the proper treatment of tuberculosis. The plan in brief is as follows: The Fiscal Court of any county may declare that county a district for the purpose of building a hospital. Or, by petition, the question may be submitted to a vote of the people at any regular election, and, if carried, it is then the duty of the Fiscal Court to declare the county a district. Any group of counties touching one another may declare themselves a single district for this purpose by a vote at any general election which carries in each of the counties involved. Then, under certain restrictions in the law, the State Commission names a considerable group of citizens, men and women, of the county or counties involved, from which group the judges of these counties name a District Board of Tuberculosis Hospital Trustees. This Board then asks of the Fiscal Court funds to be raised in the regular levy of taxes. From these funds a site is selected, subject to the approval of the State Commission, and then the Board proceeds to erect the hospital. The State Commission is given a very general oversight of the future activities of the Board, and the construction and maintenance of the hospital. Patients are to be received from the district, either free or for a weekly charge, according to their financial condition, and the cost of maintenance not met by these charges must be paid by the district.

This is not so expensive a plan as it looks. After the construction of a reasonably substantial building for the purpose of administration, the cooking and serving of meals, and the housing of the nurses, the building or buildings for the actual housing of the consumptives can be more cheaply erected than those for any similar hospital purpose, because the patients are made to live and sleep in the open air, or on verandas; very small, cheaply constructed buildings are sufficient for the purpose. The whole campaign against tuberculosis is based, not on sympathy, but on economics. Practically all of the sufferers are between the ages of 15 and 50, nearly all of them housewives or wage-earners, and many of them the parents of children. You can serve your community and insure yourself in no better way than by advocating the building of such an institution. Every cent it costs is more than returned by the distress it relieves and the poverty it prevents.

PROPERLY-MADE FLOOD GATE

Device Saves Many Fences From Being Put Out of Commission During the Rainy Seasons.

Now that the season of heavy rains is at hand the farmers whose fields are traversed by creeks and ravines will be subjected to the annoyance of having their fences washed out. Flood gates save many fences from being put out of commission, but unless they are properly made and hung they are apt to come to disaster during some violent flood when the streams are running swift and carrying wreckage, trees limbs, etc. The flood gate should be built for strength and should be made long enough to reach out a good distance on each side of the creek or ravine. The timber used in its construction should be heavy—unfinished boards are the best. The frame should be made of 2x8. The other lumber—the boards which go across the frame—should be one inch thick and twelve wide. Use spikes and tenpenny nails. The best way is to bolt the frame pieces together, says the Iowa Homestead. After the gate is made it should be hung securely. If there are no trees in line with the fence, or near enough to make their use permissible, poles must be set. A good, heavy pole should be selected. Set it as deep as possible. To be of any service it should be set in concrete. Two poles so set are sufficient to swing a gate. If dirt is stamped around the poles the lapping water will soften it and the pole will soon fall over or be washed out. Brace the poles well with wires which should be attached to the top, then tied to several surrounding trees. If there are no trees the wires can be pegged down. The gate is suspended by iron loops to a wire cable stretched between the two posts. A dozen strands of heavy telephone wire twisted together makes a good one. When it is desirable to fence against hogs light lumber can be nailed to the bottom of the gate to fill up the opening at the bottom if there should be one.

Good Flood Gate.

SPEEDY REMEDY FOR BLOAT

Many Good Animals Are Lost Because Owner Did Not Know How to Treat Case Properly.

(By E. S. HANING.)

As long as green clover pasture lasts bloat will cause the death of many a good animal simply because the owner did not know how to treat the case to effect a speedy remedy. Tapping, as every one knows, will usually give relief, but aside from being a particular piece of work it has the disadvantage of leaving a wound that cuts the animal down in flesh, and it must be protected from the flies during the healing process. Here is a treatment that I have used in a dozen cases. It has never failed, although in some instances the animals were down on their knees. As soon as the animal is known to be affected get a pail of cold water and pour it slowly over the distended sides of the animal and along the backbone. Repeat a few minutes later.

Bloat is caused by a moist steam or vapor generated from the green, wet stuff in the animals paunch, aided by the natural heat of the animal's body. The cold water quickly lowers the temperature, causing the steam to condense and form water, which then passes off by way of the bowels.

Disposal of Manure.

The most important part of the stable sanitation from the other fellow's standpoint is the disposal of the manure.

The liquid manure should be absorbed by the bedding and the bedding changed every day. The solid manure should be cleaned up morning and evening and thrown in a flyproof box or vault. If possible have it hauled away daily.

Calf Disorders.

Bowel troubles in calves are sometimes caused by milk that is excessively rich. Milk that is moderate or low in butter fat is usually better for young calves. Indigestion in older calves is usually due to unclean milk or feed, unclean vessels, close confinement in dark, unsanity stalls, and irregular or excessive feeding. In some cases it appears to be due mainly to sheer weakness and inability to digest.

Care of Milk Utensils.

Milk cans or utensils should never be allowed to set around the stable, as many careless men will thoughtlessly do. Milk is very susceptible to germs and odors, and the greatest care should always be exercised in handling. Clean utensils are important essentials in dairying.

Breeding Place for Flies.

Remember that house flies breed in horse manure in preference to any other place, and the only way to keep them down is to keep them away from the breeding place.

Market for Drafters.

The autotruck will not materially affect the market for draft horses.

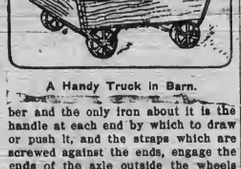
THE DAIRY

FEED FOR COWS IN PASTURE

Early Pasture Has Stimulating Effect on Milk and Butter Production —Hay and Silage Help.

Cows that are turned into early spring pasture are benefited greatly if fed as much hay and silage as they will eat, is the opinion of Professor G. C. Humphrey of the college of agriculture of the University of Wisconsin. He gives the following advice to dairymen:



Spring pasture has a stimulating effect on milk and butter fat production, and the amount of milk and butter fat is increased quite appreciably even though a decrease in live weight may occur. This increase in production is greater where hay and silage are fed than where pasture alone constitutes the feed. When cows are withheld from grass until it becomes very good they may refuse hay and silage, but ordinarily it is believed to be the best plan to supplement early spring pasture with hay and silage in such quantities as cattle will eat. Losses in live weight, which occur during the spring pasture season have to be made up later, and usually at the expense of production and the interests of the owner.

During a period of nine years it has been noted that on the average 87 per cent of the cows of the university dairy herd decreased in body weight during the two weeks following the time they were turned to pasture. The amount of shrinkage varied according to what the cows were fed in addition to pasture. During two respective years when hay and silage were not fed in addition to pasture a marked average shrinkage in weight of 51 and 95 pounds was observed.

HANDY TRUCK IN DAIRY BARN

Farmer Cannot Afford to Ignore Modern Devices That Tend to Decrease Amount of Labor.

The dairyman cannot afford to ignore that which will lighten his labor in any way. His stable can be ever so conveniently arranged and still he has enough to do, says the Independent Farmer. The truck presented in this cut is very handy and will save much labor. It is made of good lumber and the only iron about it is the handle at each end by which to draw or push it, and the straps which are screwed against the ends, engage the ends of the axle outside the wheels and are screwed flat against the bottom of the truck.

A Handy Truck in Barn.

GOOD OF COW TESTING CLUB

Many Unscientific Dairymen Relying on His Eyes and Own Judgment Rather Than Record.

There are too many cows in herds of the American farmer that do not pay for their own keep, much less yielding a profit, but the unscientific dairyman who relies alone on his eyes and own judgment rather than on records of yield and income, keeps on until he has his eyes opened by the progress of his neighbor, who may have joined a cow-testing association.

As illustrative of the difference in value of the average cows in a herd, may be cited the record of the work of cow-testing associations in operation in the state of Iowa since 1909. The best cow of the 688 tested returned a profit of $106.77, while the poorest cow showed a loss of $19.44. The average profit from the best cow in each of the 46 herds tested was $59.04, and from the poorest cow in each herd, $16.63. From the data presented it has been estimated that ten years in a cow-testing association ought to bring all the cows up to nearly 290 pounds of butter-fat per year.

SILAGE FOR YOUNG ANIMALS

It Has Very Beneficial Effect Upon System in Keeping Digestive Organs in Condition.

Silage plays a very important role in the most economical and efficient ration for young, growing dairy animals, states a recent bulletin from the Iowa station. It has a very beneficial effect upon the system in keeping the digestive organs in the best condition and as an aid in developing large digestive capacity.

In attaining this last effect it is materially aided by alfalfa or clover hay. When these feeds are given it is not necessary to feed very much grain to the animals after the end of the first year. A good winter ration for yearling dairy heifers is corn silage, fifteen to twenty pounds, alfalfa or clover hay, eight to ten pounds grain mixture consisting of equal parts corn, oats and bran, two pounds.

A State Wide Invitation

Monster Barbecue to Be Given by J. N. Camden at Versailles, Aug. 20, 1913

THIS meeting of farmers and their friends who are interested in the agricultural advancement of Kentucky is to be held that every one in the state may become acquainted and "rub elbows" with his neighbors and friends. It is to be a great farmers' convention, a place where, besides the "getting together," there will be speakers who really have something to say to the men who get their living from the soil.

In the past a barbecue, with its huge joints of smoking juicy meat and its bubbling steaming burgoo, meant political speechmaking and a warming of party spirit. This immense barbecue is a definite effort to give the farmers of the state a chance to meet and get acquainted and to hear some of the strongest speakers in the whole country discuss vital farm questions. These speakers will be brought to the meeting from the north, south, east and west, and, as they are to be limited to thirty minutes each, they will be sure to send their messages home in quick, short sentences. The list of speakers is about completed and will be given in full in the next article, which will be published soon. Kentucky is thoroughly aroused educationally, and this meeting is an outgrowth of this great wave of enthusiasm.

WHERE THE BARBECUE WILL BE HELD.

When your correspondent visited the Camden farm, just outside of Versailles, a few days ago he was shown the various points of interest that the visitor might wish to inspect. Competent men will be in charge of each farm department so that questions by visitors may be answered quickly.

In visiting the dairy barn, with its carefully selected herd of seventy-five Jerseys, it was pleasing to note that the barn had originally been used for

J. N. CAMDEN.

VERSAILLES, KENTUCKY.

TO THE FARMERS OF KENTUCKY.

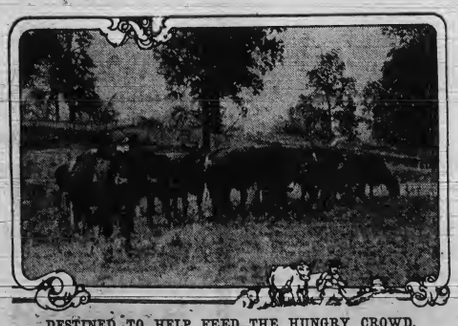
For a quarter of a century the great problems of manufacturing and of transportation have been handled upon the advice of experts--men whose accurate and scientific knowledge extends to the minutest points.

In the past few years able men have realized that farming could be put upon the same basis--that instead of being of necessity a haphazard enterprise it is one of the most scientific businesses in the world--that it may be as accurate and as reliable as those processes of nature upon which it depends.

It has been realized also, that the principles of co-operation which have worked out such great things in the industrial world, may be used with equal effectiveness in the realms of agriculture.

To aid in the rapid spread of these ideas and principles seems to me to be a most useful and noble work, and one in which I would gladly have a part in Kentucky.

With this thought, I have decided to give and old fashioned barbecue at my home in Woodford County, near Versailles, on Wednesday, August 20th. It will be my aim to have matters along the lines I indicated discussed by some of the great agricultural experts of the country, and it will be my hope that this may give fresh impetus to the work in Kentucky for the farmers which is already so well begun.



Every Farmer, and every farmer's wife, and every one interested in better farming, in the state, who feels an interest in increasing the rewards of agriculture, and in bettering the conditions of farm life, is most cordially and urgently invited to be my guest on August 20th. This invitation is given in the spirit of good fellowship, and the desire to help, and all who accept it will be most warmly welcomed.

Very sincerely,

J. N. Camden.

housing tobacco. It was not a show barn at all, but a thoroughly sanitary barn, with the emphasis on the cow end of the enterprise. Out in the woods pasture there were several bunches of fine sleek steers, some of which were destined to help feed the hungry crowd on Aug. 20.

The woods pasture, with its giant oaks, poplars, walnuts and stately elms, is an ideal place to handle the 30,000 people who are expected to be the guests at the farm on the day of the barbecue. In one end of this pasture there is a perfect amphitheater for seating those who wish to hear the speakers and the band concert which is to be provided.

Things are happening in our dear old state—better schools are building, better roads are being laid, Chautauqua meetings for farmers are developing, and now a barbecue to which an invitation is given to each and every person who believes in the welfare and the future of the agriculture of the state is an assured fact. Men of vision are dreaming of a new Kentucky—a twentieth century Kentucky—and all the agencies mentioned are bringing the dream closer each day. Dreams do come true.

Health of Hogs.

The following is a method for treating hogs that I have seen used with a great deal of success.

Erect a rail pen in your hog lot about eight by ten feet, and three feet high. Cover this with planks so as not to admit rain and in this pen put a mixture of one-half bushel of salt and five bushels of slack coal. After it has stood in the air for some time it will become compact so that the rails can be removed from around it if desired. The hogs will eat it almost continually.

A suspicious looking hog should be removed from the others. If it doesn't eat heartily, if it looks droopy and the hair doesn't lay right, it is time to put him off to himself in some place. Do not neglect the sick ones. The tendency is to let the sick ones shift for themselves and to give all the attention to the well and healthy ones. But this is a sad mistake. A sick hog is not a dead hog by any means and very often the trouble is slight. So feed it a warm light diet, and keep a portion of salt and cayenne constantly before it.

We do not believe in using the strawstacks for sleeping places for hogs and especially after the cold weather of winter has past. Warm, tight buildings are nearly as bad. If these places are used the hogs should be made to take plenty of exercise in order to keep their system in tone. If the above mentioned sleeping quarters are all that can be had for the hogs in spring and summer it is better to keep them in an open lot then to allow them to sleep in dust or rotten manure in buildings.—W. H. in Indiana Farmer.

Cow Testing Growing.

Five years ago in 1908 only four cows were entered in Ohio in the advanced registry. During the season just passed, from May, 1912, to 1913, 1202 cows have been tested and produced the required amount of butter fat to become eligible for the registry of merit. During this time 591 Holsteins have been entered, in the seven day test and 70 in the yearly test. Among the other breeds 185 Guernseys, 147 Jerseys, 81 Ayrshires and 18 Brown Swiss have been entered. Fifty-eight testers have been employed at different times to do the work. The largest part of this work is being done in the northwestern part of the state, 75 per cent of the cows tested coming from this district. Fifteen per cent come from the northwestern part, five per cent from the central and five in the southwestern section. No testing has as yet been done in the southwest.

In commenting on this rapid growth, Prof. Oscar Erf of the Ohio College of Agriculture, under whose direction the testing is being done says, "Farmers are taking up the advanced registry testing because they are learning that they cannot get high prices for their cows if they do not have a record. The work done so far has meant thousands of dollars to those farmers who have taken it up. It would probably average $20 a head if all cows were considered." In addition, interest has gradually increased among farmers. Breeders have worked to increase capacity and in doing this have learned the finer points of feeding and breeding.

Most of the testing is done from October to May. As many as 12 cows can be handled by one tester if the cows are milked but twice a day. Eight can be tested if the milking is done three times and six if four times.

A vast amount of ill health is due to impaired digestion. When the stomach fails to perform its functions properly the whole system becomes deranged. A few doses of Chamberlain's Tablets is all you need. They will strengthen your digestion, invigorate your liver, and regulate your bowels, entirely doing away with that miserable feeling due to faulty digestion. Try it. Many others have been permanently cured—why not you? For sale by J. W. Berkshire and Son and E. E. Kelly.

Mr. Best had a string of fine horses and was very successful in getting premiums, winning on the following: Emerance, the famous six year old stallion by Emerald Chief. Harness gelding by Bracken Chief, owned by J. E. Williams. The yearling filly by Fitzsimmons, owned by J. E. Williams, was champion last year. Three year old combined saddle and harness mare by Fitzsimmons said to be one of the greatest out this season. Two year old harness gelding by Fitzsimmons. Three year old harness mare by High Vine, and also a three year old saddle mare by High Vine, the best he ever sired. The great five year old combined mare Anna King, by Bourbon King. Mr. Best will make the circuit of fairs this season with a very fine lot of horses that will win their share of the premiums.

The State Primary Law.

A dispatch from Frankfort says it is anticipated that scores of amendments to the State Primary Law will be offered in the next General Assembly.

The dispatch goes on to say the law contains "ambiguities both potent and latent, that will have to be straightened out." Also the candidates are practically unanimous in favor of a change of date, "some proposing a time as late as October 1."

There can be no doubt that the law as it now stands is in need of amendment. If the amending is intelligently done the changes will be welcomed. As for the date of the primary, it might be changed to advantage. Midsummer is not the most favorable time for a political canvass. An earlier or a later date would be more satisfactory from the standpoint of the rural voters.

The State primary is a move in the right direction. The law under which it is held is somewhat crude, as it embraces provisions from two or more bills that were offered on the subject. Considering that it is obscure in some respects and not easily understood, the first primary held under it has been conducted very successfully. It has in it enough of merit to overbalance its defects, and with some skillful amending and amending it should better fulfill the purpose for which it was intended.

The danger is that if "scores of amendments" are offered the last state of the law may be worse than the first.—C.-J.

It seems that considerable ill feeling was engendered just at the close of the primary election. That is wrong. It is impossible for all the candidates for an office to win when there are two or more, and the friends of a candidate ought not to get out of humor when they get done to them what they are trying to do to the other fellow.

GREENCASTLE features are more than mere talking points; they really help. There are more practical features to be found in the Greencastle than any other Cabinet on the market.

It represents every up-to-the-minute idea for labor saving, and will positively give the user more time for recreation.

The Greencastle is sold entirely on its merits, and when you buy a Greencastle you are sure to get a 100 per cent Kitchen Cabinet value—we mean a Cabinet worth every cent you pay for it.

Every part of the Greencastle has its use. Every feature is placed to the greatest convenience of the housewife, without in the least putting herself out to use them. For instance, if you notice the arrangement of the flour hopper in other Cabinets you will find that it feeds from the top, which necessitates standing on a chair and lifting a heavy flour sack to it to fill it. Look at the Greencastle illustration, notice that the hopper tilts all the way to the top base and is filled from the back without any discomfiture. The glass sugar jar in the Greencastle supplants the poisonous metal contrivances which are furnished in other Cabinets placed on the door, the weight of which in time sags it.

The Greencastle Roll Doors is another exclusive feature, which open and close without moving a single article on the sliding top.

These and many other features are what bring out the superior qualities of the Greencastle, and is why we say you will get more practical good from this one than any other make on the market.

It will serve you obediently for life at the small cost of - - - - $28.50

John Jarrell, one of the towns best citizens died last Sunday, after having been on a decline for several months. He leaves a widow and one daughter, Mrs. Burrus Howard, who have the sympathy of all.

About sundown on the 4th inst., the town was shocked by the announcement that Peter Keim, one of the oldest and most esteemed citizens had died suddenly, while sitting out on the river bank. The remains were placed in the vault where they remained until last Sunday when they were interred. The deceased leaves a wife, one son and one daughter. He had long been a member of the local lodge of Odd-Fellows, and was an amiable, honest and valuable citizen.

Mr. Ab. Carter, of Erlanger, has the contract for building the I. O. O. F. Hall. It is to be 32 feet by 60 feet, two stories high, the first story to be store rooms and the second for a hall. The lot was purchased of William A. Gaines. It will be a magnificent building and will be quite an improvement to the town. When you want improvements in your town the Odd-Fellows are the people that can and will do it.

Dr. and Mrs. G. M. Terrill and children returned to their home in Lawrenceburg, Sunday.

The Death Angel has again come into our community and taken from our midst Mr. Peter Keim, whose death occurred August 2d, 1913. Mr. Keim was born in Germany, Nov. 23d, 1834, and removed this country Dec. 27, 1853, at the age of nineteen years. He was married in Cincinnati, Ohio September 20, 1857, to Charlotte Hammel and to this union five children were born. His wife and two sons, Mrs. Hauck, of Cincinnati, and Edward Keim, of this place, survive him, the other children having preceded him to that bourne from whence no traveler returns. Mr. Keim has been a resident of this town for fifty two years, and was respected and loved by all who knew him. He served faithfully in the Civil war. It was a familiar sight to see him sitting on his bench in the yard or out on the river bank, surrounded by a group of children. One and all loved "Fader" Keim. He belonged to the local order of Odd-Fellows, and was also a member of the encampment, at Lawrenceburg, Ind., joining this lodge Oct. 12, 1860, and being the oldest Third Degree member of the lodge. He was also a member of the Lutheran church at Cincinnati, Ohio. Mr. Keim's death was due to heart trouble and he died very suddenly, having just walked out on the river bank and taken his usual bench, and in a very short while he was carried home dead. Oh, what a lesson for the unprepared and how true it is that in the midst of life there is death. Mr. Keim leaves an example worthy to be emulated by every one. The writer extends heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved ones, and only asks that the Christ who said, "I am the light of the world," the rise and glorified Christ," will soothe their sorrow and some time illuminate the mystery. We know that the God who gave has but taken his own and pray that we may calmly say "Thy will be done."

C. E. S.

We wish to extend thanks to all friends and neighbors for the kindness shown us in our sad bereavement in the loss of our dear husband and father, Peter Keim. Especially do we wish to thank the minister, Rev. Nelson, the lodge members and the undertaker, Mr. Stein, for the efficient management.

The Bereaved Family.

Whereas it has pleased the Supreme Ruler of the Universe to call from his earthly labors our beloved and oldest 3d degree brother, Peter Keim, a Past Grand of Morning Star Lodge, No. 16, I. O. O. F.

Resolved, That in the death of Bro. Keim Morning Star Lodge has lost a faithful member, the community a good citizen and his family a devoted husband and father.

Resolved, That as a token of our grief our charter be draped for thirty days; that a copy of these resolutions be spread upon our minutes of the Lodge and one copy be sent to the bereaved family to whom we extend our heartfelt sympathy.

BOONE CO. RECORDER
W. L. RIDDELL, Publisher.

Pointers for August.

Clean houses and coops often and don't forget the windows.

Lawn clippings, lettuce and radish tops make ideal green food.

Keep your hen house and coops as cool as you possibly can.

In feeding any kind of feed to the chicks great care should be taken to prevent them from getting their feet into it.

Keep before your chicks a good supply of grit and charcoal.

The cockerels should now be separated from the pullets, and the former an extra allowance of feed.

Cabbage heads or mangles make an acceptable green food for the fowls.

Advertise your surplus cockerels and pullets, turn them into cash, as it is a useless expense to keep other than the cream of your flock until spring.

Give your growing chicks all the range possible so they will grow strong and have plenty of vitality.

Feed as much meat to your chicks as you think necessary for their betterment and you will see the results in their feathering and growth.

Don't forget the shade for your fowls and chicks during the summer months.

If possible, buy a lot of good sound wheat right now and sow it for the winter months, as it will be much higher later on.

Feed little, if any, corn or other heating foods while the temperature is high.

Add a little tonic or disinfectant t othe drinking water if your chicks are a little sluggish.

Fresh water is very essential to have before your fowls at all times during the hot weather.

Clean your premises and disinfect with slacked lime to kill existing germs.

If any chicks die, bury them deep in the ground or burn them to prevent the fowls from eating them. This will prevent limberneck in your flock.

Never allow sour or fermented food to be before your fowls at any time.

Add a few drops of creoline to the drinking water; this will kill any germs that may cause an epidemic in your chicks. It can be purchased at any drug store.

Pick out the stock right now that you expect to sell for breeders and show purposes and give them all the attention possible and you will see the results of your labor and expense in the long run.

Outlook Discouraging.

A drouth which has extended over a period of two months or more, with here and there only a shower to relieve the situation, continues thruout Central Kentucky, and every additional day is having a telling effect on the growing crops and vegetation.

Already the corn crop is cut in half, taking the whole of Central Kentucky as a field, while the tobacco crop shows the withering effect of the hot sun and the lack of moisture.

Grass is parched and brown and the problem of green feed for stock has become a serious one. Many farmers have no stock water of their own but are compelled to drive their stock to the creeks or ponds nearby, or haul all the water they use.

The lack of moisture, coupled with the heat, has practically ruined the gardens and the truck patches and vegetables of all kinds are very high. Beans and tomatoes are higher now than in the early spring and other vegetables are not to be had at any price.

The blackberry crop which at first promised so much, was cut short and many housekeepers did not get enough to make a pie.

The drouth situation is one of much concern to the farmers and already the loss will run up into millions of dollars distributed over an extensive area of country.—Blue-Grass Clipper.

Now is the time to work for more eggs next winter. The pullets should be forced for rapid maturity. If you let them take care of themselves during the warm months, the probabilities are that cold weather will overtake them before they reach laying maturity. Pullets that make the best fall and winter layers reach maturity before cold weather sets in. If not they will rarely begin to lay until the following spring. And the pullet that does not lay until spring returns her owner little, if anything in the way of profit.

Pullet hatched in April and May should be laying by October or November. If they do not, it is an indication that they have not been fed correctly, or have suffered through neglect, either from poor housing or vermin.—Ex.

Frankfort, Ky.—Under the new state primary law candidates were chosen by the various political parties in nearly every county of the state, from Middlesboro on the east to Fulton on the west, the battle of ballot was hotly waged and when the smoke cleared away the field was strewn with political debris in many sections, where big surprises were sprung on party favorites. With the exception of one district where three men were killed in a pistol battle following a dispute over the election, the voting passed off quietly throughout the commonwealth.

The man who spends for his pleasure the money which he could save towards a home is as foolish as the man who picks the flower instead of waiting for the fruit.

A Warning That Thrilled.

Rev. Dr. Chapman, in one of his straight talks to 6,000 men in Melbourne, related the following incident:

"We had in the city of Philadelphia a man who was a secretary and treasurer in one of our great institutions. I suppose there is scarcely a man in this city that would equal him as a financier. Certainly not one who could surpass him. He was a great university man with all the fine instincts of a gentleman; but strong drink claimed him as its victim, and he went out of his place into a hovel not far from my church. When his little boy died, they had no clothing to put on the baby to make it ready for the grave. We furnished the clothes. Somebody said that, although the little child's feet were hidden by the dress, they were bare, and that we might put shoes upon the feet. I got some little white kid shoes and slipped them on the little icy feet. An old time friend said, 'Get the father and bring him in. Maybe if he sees the baby he will come back to himself.' Clad in rags we brought the father in. He stood beside the little casket for a moment and looked down into the little face. Then he began to shake with great emotion. The tears just ran down his cheeks. The friend said to us, 'Leave him alone,' and we went out and left him alone with his baby. He stood there for a moment. Then it seems as if all the devils in Hell came up and clutched his throat and said, 'Drink, drink!' And he ran his fingers down over the folds of the little white dress and underneath and took off from those icy feet the little white shoes, and crammed them in his pocket; and when I took his baby to the grave, he was insensible from drink from the price of the shoes which he had pawned. I see you shudder. Hear me, you men. There is not a man in this city that had stronger will-power than my friend, dead and doomed as he is to-day. I tell you I have a right, this afternoon, to lift my voice against a sin that can take a man from his position and drag him to Hell; and I do it."—Walton W. C. T. U.

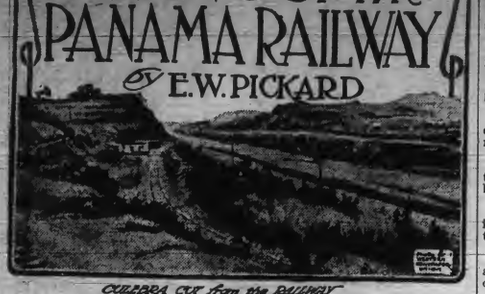
A treat for our readers that we have arranged for is a series of twelve illustrated articles on

The Panama Canal and the Isthmus in History and Romance

By Edward W. Pickard



Mr. Pickard is that type of globe-trotting author who seeks the quaint and curious places and people as subjects for his clever descriptive articles. In his present series of twelve articles which we have arranged to print, he has touched not only the actual work of building the canal, and the people who have accomplished it, but has gone into what the newspaper worker knows as the side lines, and which as a rule are of as much interest as the main story. This is particularly true in this case. After our readers have completed the last of Mr. Pickard's articles they will have a better understanding of the Panama Canal, and conditions within and surrounding the canal zone.

It is said that liquor improves with age. That may account for the fact that the older some men get, the better they like it.

PASSING of the PANAMA RAILWAY

BY E. W. PICKARD

CULEBRA CUT from the RAILWAY

Colon, C. Z.—With the completion of the Panama canal the importance of the Panama railway will decline almost to the vanishing point.

For nearly sixty years this railway has been carrying people and freight from ocean to ocean. Though only 47 miles long, it has been, for certain periods, one of the most important and most interesting railroad lines in the world. During the building of the canal, under the ownership of the United States, it has become one of the best equipped and most efficient of railways. It has given great help in the construction of the canal that will prove its virtual death.

The finding of gold in California was the cause of the building of the Panama railroad. For long years before the wild rush of argonauts in 1849 the isthmus was almost forgotten by the civilized world, but when the yellow metal was discovered on the west coast it became once more a great trade route. In order to avoid the long trip across the plains in "prairie schooners," thousands of gold-seekers went by boat to Chagres, up the Chagres river to Gorgona or Cruces and thence over the old Spanish road to Panama. This, too, was a long route and in the rainy season a painful and dangerous one because of the prevalence of disease.

To the rescue of the gold hunters came three bold Americans, W. H. Aspinwall, Henry Chauncey and John L. Stevens. In 1848 these men had asked the government of New Granada for a concession for the road, and in 1850 Stevens obtained it at Bogota. The Pacific termius could not be otherwise than at Panama, but at first the harbor of Porto Bello was selected for the Atlantic terminus. However, a New York speculator spoiled this plan by buying up all the land about the harbor and holding it at a very high price, so Navy Bay was chosen instead.

When work on the line was begun in May, 1850, there was no celebration, no turning of the first spadeful of earth with a golden shovel.

Two Americans with a gang of Indians landed on Manzanillo island, now the site of the city of Colon, then a desolate, uninhabited spot, and began the tremndous task of clearing the route through the dense jungle. The surveying party suffered intensely, for the land was so swampy and so infested with malaria and yellow fever bearing mosquitoes that they were compelled to sleep aboard a ship. Much of the time they carried their lunches tied on their heads and ate them standing waist-deep in the water.

The efforts of the company to obtain laborers were attended by a terrible tragedy. Eight hundred Chinese were brought over from Hong Kong, but within a week of their landing scores of them died. Opium was given the survivors and for a short time checked the ravages of disease. But the supply of the drug was shut off on account of its cost, and again the deaths became numerous. The poor Orientals in despair began to commit suicide, some by hanging, others by impalement, while some deliberately sat down upon the seashore and waited for the rising tide to overwhelm them. In a few weeks scarce two hundred were left, and these, broken in health and spirits, were sent to Jamaica.

Another shipload of laborers, this time from Ireland, met no better fate, for nearly every man died.

The material difficulties that confronted the railway builders are thus summarized by Tomes in his "Panama in 1855:" "The isthmus did not supply a single resource necessary for the undertaking. Not only the capital, skill and enterprise, but the labor, the wood and iron, the daily food, the clothing, the roof to cover and the instruments to work with came from abroad. . . . Most of the material used for the construction of the road was brought from vast distances. Although the country abounded in forests, it was found necessary, from the expense of labor and the want of routes of communication, to send the timber, for the most part, from the United States, and not only were the rails, to a considerable extent, laid on American pine, but the bridges, and the houses and workshops of the various settlements were of the same wood, all fashioned in Maine and Georgia. The metal work, the rails, the locomotives and the tools were brought either from England or the United States. The daily food of the laborers, even, came from a New York market."

The first section of the road was laid through a mangrove swamp in which no bottom was found, the tracks being floated on an immense pontoon. By October, 1851, eight miles had been completed and solid ground was reached at Gatun. Lack of funds now began to hamper the builders. Investors in the states had become discouraged and the cost of labor had advanced. But a hurricane came to the rescue. Two ships loaded with gold-seekers were forced to anchor near Manzanillo island and the passengers paid the company a handsome sum to carry them to Gatun in work cars. The news that the road had carried more than a thousand passengers reached New York and funds again flowed into the coffers of the company.

As the work progressed passengers were hauled longer and longer distances and before the line was completed the receipts from passengers and freight were considerably above $3,000,000. The last rails were laid the night of January 27, 1855, and the next day the first train passed clear across the isthmus from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The entire cost of the road up to December 31, 1858, had been something less than $8,000,000 and its gross earnings in the same time were a little more than that sum.

The rate across the isthmus was put at $25 gold, being intended to be to a certain extent prohibitive until they could get things into good running order, but so great was the volume of travel that the rate was not reduced for more than twenty years. Soon after its opening the road began to declare 24 per cent. dividends, and at one time its stock went up to 350.

In the '60's the company fell on hard times. It lost much of its freight traffic, was held up by the politicians in Bogota and then suffered by the completion of the Union Pacific railroad. Next Russell Sage and others like him got control of the directorate and wrecked the road. When de Lesseps came over to dig a canal his company bought up the stock and used the road to help in its work.

Then in 1904 the United States bought out the French company and also acquired the railway and so it became the first American road to be owned by the government. So economically and efficiently has it been conducted since then that it is cited as an argument for the government ownership of all our railways.

The building of the canal and especially the creation of the artificial Gatun lake made necessary the relocation of the Panama railroad along most of its route. The old roadbed now is under water for much of the way, the old line still in use being only about seven miles in length, from Cocolon to Mindi and from Corozal to Panama. From Mindi to Gatun the grade ascends to 95 feet above tide level. From Gatun the road runs east until it is four and a half miles from the canal, and then south again on great embankments across the Gatun valley.

Along this stretch passengers obtain an unusual view. Because of the construction of the Gatun dam across the channel of the Chagres river, the Chagres valley and all its tributary valleys have been converted into a lake with an area of about 164 square miles. The Gatun valley is one of these drowned arms and as the train crosses, wide stretches of water are to be seen on both sides of the track. Down below the surface are still visible the tops of giant trees that have been killed by submergence, and along the edges of the lake the tallest and hardiest of the trees reach their dead limbs above the waters. Here and there is a pretty little island that not long ago was the summit of a hill, and the shore line is most picturesquely broken up by capes, peninsulas and bays.

From Monte Lirio the line skirts the shore of the lake to the beginning of the Culebra cut at Bas Obispo. Originally it was intended to carry the railroad through the Culebra cut on a 40-foot beam along the east side, ten feet above water level, but this plan was knocked out by the slides and breaks. The line was carried around Gold Hill to a distance of two miles from the canal until it reached the Pedro Miguel valley, down which it runs to Paraiso and the canal again. Thence it runs almost parallel with the channel to Panama. There are two big steel bridges on the line. One, near Monte Lirio, has a center lift span to permit access to the upper arm of Gatun lake; the other, a quarter of a mile long, across the Chagres river at Gambos. The total cost of building the new line of the railway was $8,865,392. In addition, a large sum has been expended in increasing the terminal facilities.

Of course, even after the canal is opened, the railway will have a good deal of business, transporting people and goods between Colon and Panama, and serving the needs of the operating forces of the canal. But its days of glory have departed, and J. A. Smith, the American who has been its efficient general superintendent, recognizing that fact, has resigned and returned to the states.

Dairy Notes.

Milking into hooded pails means cleaner milk.

A well equipped milk house will soon pay for itself.

To make sure of a gentle cow, pet the calf and heifer.

Usually the cream from stripper cows churns slowly.

The calf should be fedmeal and chop dry. Do not put it in the milk.

Cleanliness and low temperature are the fundamental needs in keeping milk.

The calves that are kept growing from the very start have the best chance.

The milk sheet and the scales are a necessity with every well organized dairy.

Why not raise your own protein feeds this year and cut out the high priced millstuffs?

An oil cloth cover for the separator saves the machine and returns a cleaner product.

Ground oats make splendid feed for practically all of the growing stock on the farm.

Testing is important. Your cows, your seed corn and your farm plans should all be tested.

Whether times are hard or prosperous the man with a few good cows holds good insurance.

The more butter is washed the more flavor it loses. Good butter needs only one washing.

With dairy manure alone on the farm the corn crop can be doubled within two or three years.

Provided the cow is a good one, the more she is fed along the right lines the more she will give.

The cow with a dainty appetite, the one that is a delicate eater, is seldom the most liberal producer.

One writer says that the silo will double the amount of milk that you produce on your farm per acre.

The successful dairy farmer who has the right idea of life is usually the most satisfactory neighbor.

The cow that gives the greatest profits, other things being equal, is the cow that has the best care.

For the man whose cows do not eat their heads off, there ought to be a little money in dairying this summer.

Milking regularly each day, and feeding the cows regularly, will have much to do with the profits in the cows.

Still once in a while you can find a dairyman without a silo. What is that about having ears and yet hearing not?

Men who keep dual cows have either been misled by some false teacher or else have no desire to improve their herd.

"Were all medicines as meritorious as Chamberlain's Cholera, Colic and Diarrhoea Remedy the world would be much better off and the percentage of suffering greatly decreased," writes Lindsay Scott, of Temple, Ind. For sale by J. W. Berkshire and Son and E. E. Kelly.

The editor of the Recorder received a very unique invitation to attend the celebration of the 23d birthday of "Little Ida Grubbs Hunter," last Friday. It was illustrated in a profuse and humorous manner, indicating that the draftsman is somewhat of a cartoonist. If the entertainment on the anniversary occasion was in keeping with mirth indicated by the invitation it was lively and interesting from start to finish.

Harley Williams had 28 acres of wheat that made 35¼ bushels per acre. It is of interest to note that the ground on which this crop grew was considered worn out ten years ago; it would not grow a satisfactory crop of anything. A combination of wheat, bone meal and clover, with a limited quantity of stable manure has worked wonders with the land. Our prairie soil responds remarkably to good treatment. There is no soil that can be built up so quickly, or that retains longer what is put onto it. A stack bottom will show for 20 years. Ten years of the very best treatment would easily double the production of our soil. It has been done on a number of farms in this vicinity.—Monroe City Missouri, Democrat.

Saw Lafayette in 1826.

At the last meeting for the year of the Rebecca Emery chapter, D. A. R., at Biddeford, Me., was read a letter written by an old lady ninety years of age, who waited upon the table at the old Saco house when Lafayette made his visit there in 1825-26, and handed down by her niece.

Many a fellow who prides himself upon being a prominent man is too prominent for his own good.

SPECIAL NOTICE

To My Friends and Patrons and The Public at Large.

I have perfected a system for repairing Buggies and Vehicles of all kinds whereby the work is better than ever, wearing longer, holding the luster just twice as long as the usual way of repairing. Another great advantage whereby it is far ahead of the old way is that I use no water on any part of the body or gear until the job is in the last coat of rubbing varnish, and by that time I have all parts of the body well protected, where in doing work the old way we rub with a rubbing stone out of water, called Filler, thereby letting the water get between the pannel of the body and the sill, loosening the plugs, rusting the screws and causing plugs to come out. That is why your pannels break in corners and come loose—water gets in and destroys the glue, letting the water stand there by rotting the wood.

Recollect I have been in the Carriage Business for 35 years, and have made it a life study. I have been working on my Dry System for the last four years and now have it perfected. While there is more work attached to my system and material is more in cost, my price for a Buggy still remains the same—$12.00 for a first-class job of painting and guaranteed to be such. If you want something cheaper in painting I will do it for you but at you risk.

Kelly Rubber Tires.

I have just bought a full supply of the Kelly Springfield Rubber Tires and am prepared to supply your wants at a moment's notice. I have 3,000 pounds now ready to put on while you wait for them at prices to suit everybody that wants a high-grade tire for just the same money they pay other people for a cheap grade. Of course you know I am prepared to do anything for you in the carriage maker's line. Come and see me and get prices and I'll assure you you will go home convinced you have been treated alright.

N. B.—I guarantee the Kelly Tire to be first quality—not second or third grade, and wear twice as long as anyother make of tire.

Yours respectfully,
H. G. COLLINS, Erlanger, Ky.

Lost Her Ticket ro Heaven

The Atchison Kansas, Globe tells of a pathetic sight on Main street the other morning. An old and poorly dressed colored woman was in a frenzy of grief; she walked up and down the street moaning and wringing her hands and searching for some thing she had lost. When asked what her trouble was, she wailed that she had lost her ticket to heaven. She explained that in her church each member paid a certain sum of money and was given such a ticket. This old colored woman believed implicitly in the power of her ticket; to her it represented a berth in heaven. She had paid for it with hours of backbreaking labor.

Lost—On road between Johnnie Hogan's and Hebron, small brown hand-bag containing a handkerchief and some change. Finder will please return to Garnett's store in Hebron.

.22 RIFLES

The Little Rifles—Big in Quality

YOU are going to buy a .22 calibre rifle, single shot or repeater—you'll find that many well known crack shots started with a Remington-UMC .22. Their advice now would be "By all means, get a Remington-UMC" because they know that there is a tendency in some quarters to look upon these models as only "a small boy's rifle" and to cheapen them so that they can be sold at a price.

You have just as much right to expect full shooting value in your .22 calibre arm as in your $75 big game rifle.

You want the Remington-UMC single shot at from $3 to $6, .22, .25-10 or .32 calibre, made by the same people who make the famous Remington-UMC Autoloading Rifles.

Or, if you prefer the repeating rifle, the Remington-UMC slide action .22 repeater with its easy take-down and special safety features, shooting .22 short, .22 long or .22 long rifle cartridges, at $10 and up, is your arm. Sold by live dealers of this community—the most popular small caliber rifles in America.

An Educational Creed.

The State that has the men has the present, and the State that has the schools has the future. A great Commonwealth can not be bestowed; it must be achieved thru education. Our Commonwealth's idealization of education is the result of the law of self-preservation. It recognizes its own being as an organism composed of spiritual atoms that are capable of growth or degeneration, intelligent patriotism or anarchy. It is natural for our government to idealize an intelligent, active, rational, aggressive, citizen. It takes a full grown mind to reach and a full grown heart to feel a full grown democracy. It will take full grown citizens to make a full grown Kentucky, and a full grown school system exploited to the highest degree of social and industrial efficiency to make full-grown citizens. Our noble boys and girls stand by our side armed with ability and nerve ready to accomplish the larger Kentucky, if we will only give them an opportunity. We greet childhood today and recognize a patriotic call for education and more abundant education, ideas and more noble ideas, more government by the teacher and less government by the policeman, more government by the school house and less government by the military camp, more and better schools and fewer jails and penitentiaries, more scholars and fewer criminals, more freemen and fewer slaves, more life and still more life. We need more life, and every patriot will join in the great work of putting at the door of every child in the land a modern school house with equipment and sanitation, a democratized cause of study, and a teacher of scholarship, character and personality. We believe in a public policy and efficiency that will ring the moral, intellectual and industrial "rising bell" in the life of every child in our land. H. H. CHERRY.

Murder Verdict Returned.

Aurora, Ind.—Herman C. Boarchers, 34 years old, a cabinet maker, who was found guilty of murder in the first degree, but pronounced insane by a jury in the Dearborn County Circuit Court four years ago, has been returned to the county jail from the Indiana State Hospital for Criminal Insane in the penitentiary in Michigan City, where he has been confined.

Boarchers will be tried at the next term of the circuit court on an insanity charge.

Boarchers shot and killed Herman F. Ritzie, 24 years old, of Cincinnati, Ohio, a baker, after luring him from the Queen City to his home in West Aurora. He accused Ritzie of being too friendly with a relative, who now resides in Cincinnati.

Ritzie's relatives of Cincinnati have prepared to fight the release of Boarchers.

Sylvanus A. Palmer Dead.

Sylvanus A. Palmer, a former resident of Lawrenceburg, died at his home at Norwood, O., Thursday of paralysis. His age was about seventy-three, and he was a veteran of the civil war. When he lived in Lawrenceburg he conducted a blacksmith shop at the corner of Walnut and Tate streets and was known as a skillful and resourceful workman. Besides a widow and four children Mr. Palmer is survived by two brothers, John M. Palmer of Dayton, Ohio, and Frank M. Palmer of Dillsboro, and two sisters, Mrs. W. F. Worley of Norwood and Mrs. J. D. Cole of Dillsboro. The body was taken to Hamilton, Ohio, for interment in Greenwood cemetery, Saturday.—Lawrenceburg Press.

Mr. Palmer was well known here where he lived many years ago and operated a blacksmith shop.

Rapid Growth Made by Corn

It has always astonished me to hear how some people talk of the rapid growth that corn will make in a day. Some seemingly impossible statements are made and usually such are based on guess without any accurate knowledge at hand. I concluded to know the truth so measured a number of stalks and kept data. One stalk that I measured grew two and a half inches in 24 hours. The corn was planted May 10 and up to July 5, 55 days, I found that it had made a growth of eighty-five inches or an average of one and a half inches per day including the days it took to sprout and reach the surface of the ground.—J. G. Holt in Indiana Farmer.

Postmaster Resigns.

Eddyville.—Terry T. Hansberry, one of the most popular postmasters Eddyville has ever had, resigned. Mr. Hansberry is a Republican, and he felt that he was in duty bound to hand in his resignation in view of the fact that there is a Democratic administration in Washington. Democrats and Republicans express regret over the fact that Mr. Hansberry has handed in his resignation, as it was generally believed he would have been allowed to serve out his term had he desired.

The large passenger truck operated by Wm. Bentler at Erlanger, was struck by a cut of freight cars at Stephenson's crossing in Erlanger, last Monday morning, and wrecked. A man and his two little girls who were in the truck saw in time the cut of cars coming upon them and got out of the truck, but Mr. Bentler stuck to the steering wheel and was bruised considerably by the collision.

Corrupting Voters.

The practice of candidates for office spending large sums of money in vote-buying is one on which a halt should be called immediately. That there are several hundred voters in this county who sell their votes is due as much to the candidates for office as to the voters themselves.

Corrupting influences of this kind should be removed at once. We sincerely hope before another campaign has come means will be devised that will entirely eliminate this practice.

To disfranchise for several years all voters who sell their vote would have a salutary effect. To disqualify any candidate who buys votes would probably be even more effective. The practice of vote buying has been in effect in this county always. It seems, or at least ever since the county offices have been worth holding. We do not accuse any candidate, but reports have been spread broadcast that large sums of money were spent for this purpose.

Because of this condition a man without money has very little chance to win a county office worth while. And yet when two or three candidates for a county office of about equal resources are pitted against each other, the foolishness of using money for vote-buying is easily discerned. Each candidate's money just about offsets that of his opponent and each gets just about the same vote he would have gotten had matters been run along normal lines and had vote-buying not been engaged in. The candidates are simply the losers of the money they have spent for this purpose, while their money has been disbursed among a class of people it will not help much.

In several counties in the State in the primary last Saturday, agreements were entered into by the candidates to use neither money, whiskey or other undue influence in securing votes. In these counties a perfectly quiet and lawful election was held, while the candidates are several thousand dollars better off than they would have been had they not made the agreement.—Grant County News.

IMPORTANCE OF GOOD COWS.

None but good cows should be tolerated on the dairy farm. It does not pay to have poor boarders. A cow that is well fed and cared for should produce 6,000 pounds of milk containing .3 per cent. of butter fat, or should make 250 pounds of butter per year.

The milk should be weighed at least one day each month, and a test made for butter fat. This is the only accurate way of making comparisons and finding out what the herd is doing individually. The cow stable should be well lighted, well ventilated and kept clean. Give the cows plenty of wholesome food. It is the poorest economy to stint them either in the matter of food or water. Also see that the salt is always accessible to the cattle.

There is no nicer place to milk cows than in a well-kept stable. Do it quickly, cleanly and thoroughly. Cows do not like unnecessary noise or delay. Begin milking at the same hour night and morning, and milk the cows in the same order. Wipe the cow's flanks and udder to prevent loose dirt and hairs falling into the milk. Do not wet the hands with milk. A practice to be recommended is rubbing a little vaseline on the hands. This keeps the teats in nice condition and overcomes the objection some have to milking with dry hands. Nothing tends more readily to drying up the milk flow than leaving a little milk in the udder.

Remove the milk as soon as possible from the stable, and immediately strain through several thicknesses of cheesecloth. Place the cheesecloth over the bottom of the strainer and secure it with an easy fitting hoop. The cloth must be removed and well washed after each time of using.

Stand By Nominees.

For two weeks past we have frequently heard men who call themselves Democrats, state that if so and so is nominated they would not vote for them. No man is a true Democrat who goes into a primary and then if his man is not nominated, fails to stand by the one who is. Be a man, if you play ball and you lose take your medicine and do not become a bolter. We want to roll up a large majority for our ticket this fall and it is your duty to, put your shoulder to the wheel and help. No knocking but stick to the punch-eon. Hurrah! for the ticket.—Owen County Democrat.

J. W. Eberhardt, manager of the Lagoon Motordrome was bound over to the Kenton county grand jury yesterday in the sum of $1,500 on a charge of involuntary manslaughter by Acting Co. Judge D. C. Lee, in Covington, in connection with the motorcycle disaster in which Odin Johnson, a rider, was almost instantly killed, and nine other persons so severely burned that they died after being removed to a hospital. All witnesses were held in the sum of $100 each for their appearance before the grand jury.—Enquirer August 7th.

A CARD.

To the people of Boone County, Ky.:

Friends:—I take this method of thanking you who so loyally supported me in my race for Representative. I entered the race morally clean and came out in the same manner. I have no regrets, nor apologies to make to any man. My conscience is clear, and if I can only come out of the Legislature as I have out of this campaign, I will be thankful.

The people of Boone county nominated me to represent them whether they supported me or not, and I intend to do so to the best of my ability. I believe in equal rights to all and special privileges to none. I want to seek the right and the right only in all matters, and be able to stand as firm as a mountain of stone that can never be overthrown, and in my journey thrugh life I want to make a race that when life's race is ended I may come out victorious, and be able to stand and have it said of me, "Well done thou good and faithful servant, you have fought the fight, you have kept the faith."

A word to the people of Petersburg precinct, who called me to enter the race and who nobly stood by me on August 2d:—I shall always have a warm spot in my heart for you. I was born in Petersburg sixty-seven years ago, and there is no spot on earth as dear to me as that beautiful little city, and when God sees fit in His wisdom to call me hence, I want to be laid to rest in that old cemetery below town.

To the defeated candidates:—We met on the roads and different places with a glad smile and a hearty hand shake. We could not all be nominated, but I wish it had been so that we could, yet I shall never forget that smile and the grasp of the hand when meeting. I want to be always able to meet you with that friendly greeting as I did while in the campaign. My only wish is that our walk and acts through life's campaign may be such that when the roll is called up yonder, we may all be ready to say, "My name is written there."

Again thanking the people, one and all, I remain your humble servant,

W. T. STOTT.

The Teachers' Institutes.

About this time of year the Teachers' Institute appears on the calendar of events. According to law and custom every county must have an institute and every teacher must attend.

The State Supervisor of Rural Schools has lately asserted that the teachers' institutes, measured by maximum efficiency, are a failure. He concedes that they accomplish much good which can be accomplished in no other way but his idea is that for an institute to be a success "every teacher must be really interested in some phase of its activity." In this way every teacher would receive the instruction and inspiration that is specifically needed. Measured by this standard there are few successful institutes.

The Supervisor sees some promise in the group system of conducting the institutes. This, it appears, was tried in Whitley-co with much satisfaction. The 159 teachers were divided into groups which met in separate rooms. Each group was in charge of a leader whose business it was to direct the discussions. The round-table method was adopted, and in this way everybody participated. This is a practical method of dealing with school topics and is an improvement on the old plan when the programme is generally monopolized by the instructor and a few leading spirits in the gathering.

The average institute is not all that it should be, and the Supervisor does not misstate the case when he terms it a failure from the standpoint of high efficiency. It is undoubtedly a fact that in most institutes the masses of the teachers manifest only a languid interest. They attend the sessions perfunctorily. They take little or no part in the discussions, and they receive little or no benefit. There should be some way of infusing more life into the institutes and the group plan seems well worth trying.

In some cases two or more counties hold institutes conjointly. Such meetings are calculated to attract more attention both from the teachers and the public, and there is some reason for believing that they are an improvement over the stereotyped form of institute that is held in the great majority of the counties.—C.-J.

The first watermelons appeared on the local market last week. The melons were small and the price was large—in fact they should have been priced by the small measure.

The weather last week was not such as is condusive to the success of a fair, although quite a number of Boone county people passed in at the gates over at Lawrenceburg.

Local Happenings.

Some tobacco has fired badly.

R. B. Huey and Frank Voshell will receive their silos this week.

William Kirkpatrick was gathering lambs pretty lively last week.

Fine rain last Friday morning, which was badly needed by vegetation.

The rains the past month were confined to small areare in this county.

Mr. W. S. Gunsalus, a farmer living near Fleming, Pa., says he has used Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy in his family for fourteen years, and that he has found it to be an excellent remedy, and takes pleasure in recommending it. For sale by J. W. Berkshire & Son and E. E. Kelly.

Hubert Gaines' yearling horse colt by his stallion, Harrison Prince, made a great show at Lawrenceburg last week capturing every premium in his class. He had several competitors but he outclassed them so badly the contests were easy. This young animal will be exhibited at Erlanger and Florence fairs.

Mrs. Permelia Mitchell, 63, died of senility on the 9th inst., at her home in Kenton county. She was the widow of the late Geo. Mitchell and a daughter of Thos. Underhill many years deceased. The remains were brought last Sunday to the old homestead now owned by William Hedges, and interred in the family cemetery.

Mrs. Carrie Fish, nee Smith, died at her home in Texas, one day last week. Death followed a surgical operation for a liver trouble. Mrs. Fish was 53 years of age and a daughter of the late Dr. J. F. Smith, many years ago a prominent physician in this county. She is survived by several brothers and sisters who have the sympathy of all.

No one will enjoy the big fish fry next Saturday more than J. M. Barlow. It will be the most enjoyable occasion of his life, excepting probably his wedding day. If you attend and do not enjoy yourself it will be no fault of his nor his son-in-law W. P. Beemon, whose success at the primary election is the incentive for the big celebration.

The primary election law which was tried out in Kentucky on the 2d inst., worked pretty well according to reports from the different parts of the State. As is the case with many new laws it needs some amendments but there seems to be no occasion for any radical changes in it. Of course it is popular with the candidates because of its relieving them of the expense of the primary.

Last Friday afternoon, when scoring for a race at Lawrenceburg fair, one of the horses fell and the driver was thrown to the track. The horse that was coming behind was thrown also, striking the man in front, injuring him so badly that he died in about twelve hours. He was from Tennessee. This was the worst accident that ever happened at the Lawrenceburg fair, and resulted from the breaking of the hobbies on the racer.

In appreciation of the loyal support afforded me in my race for Assessor of Boone county in which I was successful, I shall give an all day outing at my home on Saturday August 16, 1913, and I most cordially invite all of my neighbors and friends of Boone county to be present on that day. I especially invite all of my opponents in the past race and also their friends. Everybody welcome.

Very Truly Yours,
W. P. BEEMON.

The Erlanger Fair and Races will begin on Wednesday, August 20th and continue four days. The usual list of liberal premiums will be given while the purses for the races are ample to insure some good speed contests. Every thing possible will be done to make the patrons enjoy themselves and receive their money's worth in the way of entertainment. If you want a catalogue address S. W. Adams, Secretary, Erlanger, and it will be sent you promptly. See the fair advertisement on another page.

E. L. Dix, Principal.

CARD OF THANKS.

We wish to thank each and everyone who so kindly helped us when our darling son, Russell Corwin Mccubbin, was killed, at the depot, in the home, at the church and the grave side, and in the sickness we have since had ; also the neighbors who so kindly came to to the field and helped us there—we thank you everyone and will always remember you. We feel your kindness more than words can express.

J. A. Mccubbin and wife.

CARD.

I take this method of congratulating my successful competitors for the nomination of county assessor, and thanking those who supported and stood by me so faithfully to the end. Altho defeated and my plans for the future somewhat disarranged, there is no sting or soreness rankling in my bosom, for all of my opponents and the people treated me nicely and in order to show my appreciation of such treatment I will use my best efforts to secure the election of the full ticket nominated.

HARRY RILEY.

CIRCUIT COURT.

The August term of the Boone Circuit Court began at 9 a. m., last Monday, Judge Cammack and Commonwealth's Attorney M. L. Downs being on hand and ready for action, while Circuit Clerk Alvin Steiger, of Owenton, took charge of the clerk's desk, assisting Circuit Clerk Maurer.

The court's attention was turned first to organizing the grand and petit juries, which are as follows :

Grand Jury.—
John Hogan, Foreman.
C. H. Tanner.
Thomas Watts.
Thomas W. Rice.
J. D. Cloud.
Woodie Sullivan.
Lewis Beemon.
John Taylor.
R. O. Powers.
Wm. Craig.
J. C. Brown.

Petit Jury No. 1.—
R. B. Carver.
T. E. Garrison.
Huey Aylor.
Bluford Clore.
W. T. Ryle.
Hubert Rouse.
Everett Helms.
Joe Fisher.
C. L. Griffith.
E. I. Rouse.
Benj. F. Bedinger.
Courtney Walton.

Jury No. 2.—
Perry Presser.
A. D. Williamson.
Xen Scott.
Hubert White.
Ottis Rouse.
Clinton Blankenbeker.
Chas. Wilson.
Geo. Clark.
Charles Moore.
John T. Rich.
R. C. McNeely.
Jas. Smith.

The following attorneys other than those of the local bar have been attending court:
D. E. Castleman, Erlanger
O. M. Rogers, Erlanger.
J. T. Murphy, Covington.
John L. Vest, Walton.
Hon. Thornton Snyder, Cincinnati.
Hon. W. W. Dickerson, Cincinnati.
Judge J. G. Tomlin, Walton.
Joel C. Clore, Cincinnati.
E. F. Menefee, Crittenden.
Harper Rucker, Cincinnati.

Judge John M. Lassing, of the Court of Appeals, arrived Wednesday morning to attend court a day or two.

The Commonwealth has gathered in several fines.

The attendance upon court this week has been small.

In the suit of Rankins vs. Menefee, both practicing physicians at Walton, the court held that the contract entered into by and between them when they formed a partnership for the practice of medicine, did not abrogate the contract in which Menefee bound himself not again to practice within fifteen miles of Walton, when he sold out to Rankins. Rankins was also given judgment for $359 for breech of contract.

In the Belleview Graded school suit the court holds that the only question in the case is, did a majority of the voters in the territory annexed to the original district sign the petition asking they be annexed.

The grand jury has been handling quite a number of witnesses.

The appeal from the Quarterly Court in the suit of Jones vs. Aylor, went on trial Wednesday morning. In the lower court Jones was given judgment against Aylor for hauling milk from Idie wild neighborhood to a milk station at Hebron. Jones claimed that Aylor employed him to do the work.

A rain which under ordinary conditions would have been considered a good one visited this section Wednesday night. It did a vast amount of good to corn, tobacco and grass and gave new life to the gardens which were literally burning up. More rain is needed—a root soaker. No water has been put in the ponds during the summer. Stock water is scarce. —Georgetown Times.

For You and Your Wife

A cheerful, pretty bedroom will help you to start your day in a cheerful, pleasant mood. Its a haven of rest for you to come back to at night. And all day long its a pleasure to your wife.

To make a pretty bedroom it is more important to have tasteful furniture that harmonizes, than furniture that merely costs a lot. A brass bed, or a pretty iron bed if you prefer, dresser and chiffonier, a low rocking chair and one or two straight back chairs to match, a shirtwaist box, light colored rug on the floor,—all this does not cost vrey much, IF YOU BUY FROM US, and makes a truly pretty room. Come in and talk it over.

Don't forget to get a STEARNS & FOSTER mattress. That is what makes your bedroom a haven of rest. No other mattress is so comfortable.

Made in all grades of superiority ; $9.00 upward. Windsor Grade at $13.50 is guaranteed SUPERIOR TO ANY OTHER ADVERTISED MATTRESS. We sell it on 60 nights trial. If you CAN part with it at the end of that time we will return your money without question or comment.

DAIRY

CARE OF THE DAIRY HEIFER

Object Should Be to Keep Young Animals in Growing Condition Without Becoming Too Fat.

(By C. H. ECKLES, Missouri College of Agriculture.)

Little difficulty is encountered in raising calves from the time of weaning until ready to come into milk. If the young animals are on pasture, no further attention is necessary, since grass furnishes the best and usually the cheapest growth.

The winter ration should consist of all the roughness the animal will consume, and a small amount of grain in addition. The object should be to keep the young animals in a growing condition without becoming excessively fat. The liberal use of roughness is desirable, since it is usually the cheapest feed at hand, and, further, it is generally believed by experienced breeders that the consumption of large amounts of roughness while young helps to develop the organs of digestion to the maximum, which is desirable when the cow comes into milk.

The roughness should by all means consist of some legume, as clover, alfalfa or cowpea hay, on account of the palatability and high protein and ash content of this class of feeds. Corn silage is also well adapted for part of the ration, but should always be combined with some leguminous hay or with a ration of grain that supplies ample material for growth, such as wheat, bran or oats.

SWISS ARE FOND OF CHEESE

Zermatt, Cut With Hatchet, Is Considered Most Important on All Ceremonious Occasions.

In Switzerland every one seems to be born with a taste for cheese, and the harder the cheese the better they like it.

Zermatt cheese is so hard that it has to be cut with a hatchet, but its use is considered most important and necessary on all ceremonious occasions.

The rank of a Swiss family is often known by the age of its cheese, and the more respect or affection that a guest inspires the harder is the cheese that is served in his honor. These are families where the cheese in the larder dates back several hundred years and is so valuable that it is only served on great occasions such as baptisms, weddings and funerals. On the birth of an heir a cheese is made and named, and it is not cut until the wedding of the new arrival.

COVERED MILK PAIL IS BEST

Open Vessels Contain Many More Bacteria Than Where Open Top Receptacles Are Used.

At the Connecticut experiment station it was found that milk from an open pail contained 6½ times as many bacteria as when a covered pail was used. In another stable, not quite so clean, the open pail contained 30 times as many bacteria. In another very dirty farm, 97 per cent. of the bacteria were kept out by the covered pail. At the Wisconsin station extended tests showed 20 times more bacteria in milk from an open pail than where a small top pail was used.

RATIONS FOR DAIRY CATTLE

More Palatable the Food the Greater Quantity a Cow Will Consume—Water Is Also Important.

The following general facts should be observed in making up the ration for a dairy cow. A cow should be fed all that she will eat and digest well, giving due consideration to the cost, digestibility and composition of the food fed. The more palatable the food the greater quantity a cow will consume. Variety often increases palatability.

A part of the ration should be succulent in nature, as such food stimulates action in the intestinal tract, which stimulates vigor, thrift and health in the animal. Another important part of the food supply is water. Too often this is not given proper consideration.

Cleaning Utensils.

If any utensil has become sour or tainted, special scalding will be necessary to restore it to usefulness. Steam is still more powerful than water as a destroyer of bacteria, being more penetrating as well as giving more intense heat.

LEFT YOUNG MOTHER GASPING

Mrs. O'Leary's Well-Meant Words of Compassion Contained a Meaning That Shocked.

There are still two opinions concerning red hair. She was a very proud young mother. All the old masters had never painted such a bambino, had never imagined such a cherub as hers. Quite simply she believed it. And the baby's hair was red. It did not occur to her that red hair was anything but completely and wholly admirable. The little shining copper colored head seemed to her the sum of all that was radiant and lovely.

"I've come for the baby's wash, ma'am."

It was Mrs. O'Leary, the washerwoman,—a rawboned, dejected soul—who spoke. Evidently there was for her no inexpressible glory shining amid the blue and white draperies of a bassinet. How hard the world was on some women! So thought the young mother and proudly drew back the cover from the baby's nest.

"Come and look at my little daughter," she said. "See, she has red hair."

A flash of some strong feeling—could it be compassion?—illumined the dejected features of Mrs. O'Leary. The proud young mother felt her hand gripped in a grasp of iron, and a warm Irish voice sounded in her ears.

"There, there," it said soothingly. "Don't you fret. Don't you fret. You can't never tell what they look like when they're small. Some of 'em grows up into real good lookin' girls. They do that!"

LEAVE OUT THE SUPERFLUOUS

Some Truth in Assertion That Present Generation Considers Too Many "Wants" as "Needs."

A woman who has been observing people and things has come to the conclusion that the expense of living today is largely due to individual indulgence. People want so much more than they formerly did, or at any rate, if they wanted it before, they often did without it, for expediency's sake; but now, she says, to want and to have go hand in hand without regard for expediency. This woman says: "My idea of the widespread complaint of the high cost of living is that people are not temperate in supplying their three principal wants, namely: food, clothing and shelter. Some people cut down on food and shelter and spend an overabundance on clothing. Others indulge themselves in rich foods that are absolutely unnecessary. Still others like to live in fashionable quarters and neglect their food and shelter. A person to be happy must preserve a balance in all things. One must be temperate with regard to food, clothing and shelter. Live in a respectable but not ultra-fashionable neighborhood; wear standard clothes, not the latest Paris fashions; eat good, substantial food, not rich, tasty delicacies that cater only to the palate, is my parting advice."

Yes, She Probably Would.

"Does anybody ever kick you in the nose?" said the ass.

"Aye, does there," said the spider; "you and your like that are always walking on me, or lying down on me, or running over me."

"Well, why don't you stay on the wall?" said the ass.

"Sure, my wife is there," replied the spider.

"What's the harm in that?" said the ass.

"She'd eat me," said the spider. "Have you got a wife yourself now?"

"I have not," said the ass. "I wish I had."

"That's a bachelor's talk," said the spider; "all the same, we can't keep away from them."

"If your wife was an ass she wouldn't eat you," said the ass.

"She'd be doing something else, then," replied the spider.—From James Stephens "The Crock of Gold."

That Vacant Chair.

Perhaps it is more sad when a chair is vacant in life than in death. Men make a feast. Many who might belong at the table are not there. Death has not claimed them. What the world votes to be failures has kept them away. In the race as it is run they are the laggards. Perhaps, in our reckoning they will never win. Had you noticed how in the next generation their children almost always arrive? The poor man's son is the rich man of tomorrow and the children of "failures" are the country's future successes. There is an ebb and flow of fortune which must surely reconcile us all to the rhythm of being. Who dares estimate life by a single generation? —Los Angeles Times.

Story of Hohenzollern Ghost.

It was a Prussian royal wedding of four centuries ago that gave to the tradition of the "white lady," the famous Hohenzollern ghost. The Burgrave Albert loved a young widow of the house of Oriamunde, but once thoughtlessly remarked that their wedding would be "impossible until four eyes are out of the way." He allured to his uncle and brother, but she thought he meant her two little children, whom she accordingly murdered with a knitting needle. The horrified Albert forsook her and married Sophia of Henneberg, whereupon the erring widow, went mad, died and ever since has haunted the royal palaces in mourning garb with a white veil.

STATE CHAMPION NOT IN IT

Real Hero of the Links in This Community Was the Man Who Refused to Play the Game.

We had a chance to demonstrate our theory last fall, says a writer in the Topeka Capital. It worked like a potato in a rheumatic's pocket. Through the influence of the missus, who has friends, we obtained a card to a very select country club in an eastern state, where we stayed ten days. The club had golfitis in its most acute form. The men and women who frequented the club played golf, talked golf, ate golf and slept it. It was the home of the state champion and the game was the one important topic of conversation.

For a day or two we were lost in the atmosphere of golf which befogged the place. Then we began to attract a little attention by indicating in a delicate and polite way that the whole thing bored us to extinction. When we respectfully declined to engage in the game or borrow any of the implements connected with the sport there was great surprise. Our assertion that we did not play the game and did not wish to was received with amazement. Up to the time of our advent the state champion had been the colossal figure of the club.

At the end of three days we had the state champion hanging on to the ropes. At the end of a week his existence had been forgotten. As a curiosity he had been crowded out of place by the "eccentric" Kansan who sat around reading the reports of the world's championship games, deaf to golf and all of its manifestations. It isn't always the hand that is dealt you. It is the way you play it.

ACCORDED A HIGH POSITION

Women of Servia, Well Educated and Able, Are Companions of Their Husbands and Brothers.

There is no country in the world where women occupy a more dignified position in the home than Servia. The Servian idea is quite different from that of the Turk, who keeps his women behind shut doors or the German, whose ideal woman is a hausfrau. In Servia the woman is the companion of the man.

A man is responsible for his unmarried sisters, and throughout the Balkan states it is considered rather a breach of etiquette for him to marry before his older sister.

No Servian girl would feel she could hold up her head in society unless she could speak four languages. There is hardly a Servian woman who cannot play some musical instrument. Embroidery, painting, drawing, and sculpture are all studied. Politics is a popular feature among women.

Servian women are very domesticated and the highest ladies pay personal attention to trivial matters of housekeeping.

There are two women doctors practicing in Belgrade, and several women teachers. But public opinion, on the whole, is rather against women entering the labor arena.

Jekyll and Hyde Both Out.

One day Mr. Jenkins, senior partner in the firm, came out of his private office and handed Jimmy, the office boy, a slip of paper and said:

"Here, Jimmy, go over to the public library and get me 'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde.' I have written it on a piece of paper for you so that you will not forget."

Jimmy lost the slip of paper on the way. When he discovered his loss he returned to the office without going to the library and was seated at his little desk innocently shooting flies with a rubber band when Mr. Jenkins said to him:

"Well, Jimmy, where's 'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde?'"

"Please, Mr. Jenkins," responded Jimmy with well feigned candor, "the lady at the library said they both just went to the ball game and to call for them in the morning."

Old Town Again in Limelight.

Stockwell, England, where a hidden church over 600 years old has just been discovered, has hitherto been chiefly famous for its ghost, which set all London in an uproar in 1772. Making the furniture dance and the crockery fall was the ghost's specialty, though by way of variety an egg once flew across the room and hit the cat. Having excited London and frightened Stockwell, the ghost retired, leaving behind a firm belief in his supernatural origin, until many years later a servant admitted that long horse hairs attached to the crockery and wires to the furniture had enabled her to play the ghost so successfully that frightened beholders never even detected such open feats as throwing the egg at the cat.

La Grande Passion.

"Une grande passion est une grande folie. Mediocrity in all things is wisdom; mediocrity in sensations is superlative wisdom. . . . No young lady should fall in love till the offer has been made, accepted, the marriage ceremony performed, and the first half-year of married life has passed away. A woman may then begin to love, but with very great precaution—very coolly, very moderately, very rationally. If ever she loves so much that a harsh word or a cool look cuts her to the heart, she is a fool. If she ever loves so much that her husband's will is her law, and that she has got into the habit of watching his look in order that she may anticipate his wishes, she will soon be a neglected fool."—Charlotte Bronte.

TYPICAL DINNER IN FRANCE

Princess Hassan Tells of a Meal and Its Service in the Land of True Epicures.

A typical French dinner—not an exceptional one, mark you, but such a dinner as a small tradesman's family would have—is incomparably superior to the plain roast dinner.

There would be, first of all, a few relishes, according to the season of the year. Radishes, ice cold, sardines, olives, caviar. Just a little of each with which to awaken the appetite, then the soup to excite gently the liquids of the throat and stomach, then a little entree—usually a bit of fish with its appropriate vegetable, or a handful of vegetables flavored with meat sauce. Then and not till then, does the chief course appear.

It may be a roast, or game, or chicken, or chops, but in no case will it be anything which is not in harmony with the previous courses and it will be eaten in moderation, for the edge of the diner's appetite will have been dulled by the lighter foods which have preceded it. With it comes the salad—varied throughout the year by all the possible changes of the season, and never, never by any possibility will it be such a dreadful green hybrid as the romaine, strawberry and green pepper thing. After the salad there will be fruit or mellow cheese, and then coffee. It will take two hours to eat such a dinner, but it will take only half what the typical American dinner costs to pay for it, and there will be no indigestion afterward, no matter of what the dinner is composed.—Princess Hassan in an Interview by Louise Rice in the Delineator.

GIVE THIS A LITTLE THOUGHT

There Is a Point to This Imported Joke, But Perhaps You Will Have To Look for It.

This is not an American joke. The reader is solemnly warned that it is of German extraction. Germans, as everybody knows, like their jests broad and brutal. The victim of this one was Cousin Hugo.

It seems Cousin Hugo made a night of it and got home as the small hours began to cease to be so small. As he climbed the stairs he stumbled (in spite of the most elaborate care) and rolled down into the hall below. The consequence, for Cousin Hugo is not so young as he used to be, was a broken collarbone and a strained back. Ahead even of the milkman, then, came the family doctor, an estimable old gentleman, and administered soothing words while he encased the patient in plaster.

"I know, my dear sir," he said, "that it hurts like the deuce, but it is not a bit dangerous. All the same you'll have to stay in bed for a while. You got a nasty fall. How did it happen? Was it dark?"

"It was not, doctor," replied Cousin Hugo with some asperity, "it was light."

But perhaps you are not a beer-drinker.—New York Evening Post.

Curing Wood.

Wood has contagious diseases! A stick of wood in a lumber yard may be sick and infect other timbers, which later may develop the disease when they are supporting weights in a new building. Some of the diseases are so contagious that in a building they will jump several feet across masonry or brick to some stick of healthy wood. Cures were recently discussed by the American Society of Mechanical Engineers.

Most of the diseases are varieties of dry rot caused by a fungus, and most of the varieties of dry rot fungus cannot stand heat much over 100 degrees; so the most likely cure is to close a building up tight, if any beams are infected, and heat it up to 120 or 140 degrees. Even this is not always successful, for ends of beams are buried in the outer brick walls and the heat may not reach them.—Saturday Evening Post.

Says Ants Do Not Co-Operate.

M. Cornetz, a practised observer of insect life, asserts that ants know nothing of co-operation in their social life. In proof he cites an experiment which any one can repeat. Offer an ant a piece of cheese shaped like a shuttle; it seizes the tip, turns it about and starts dragging it in the direction of its nest. Other ants arrive and seize the cheese by its sides. It continues to advance, but more slowly. There is no united effort; each ant is trying to turn the crumb of cheese around. If we chase off the ants on the right the cheese will turn to the right, for the other ants are pushing it. Chase off those on the left and it turns to the left for the same reason. Chase off the one that is pulling it and it stands still, for the ants on each side counteract each other.

M. Cornetz holds this a proof that each ant is acting for himself alone.

China "Called" Livingstone.

It is not generally known that Livingstone originally had the intention of devoting himself to the work of "a pioneer of Christianity in China." It was as such that he offered himself to the London Missionary society in 1837, but when he had received his diploma from the faculty of physicians and surgeons in 1840, he found China closed to him, as Great Britain was then at war with the country. It was his meeting with Moffat, who had recently returned from South Africa, that led his steps to the Dark Continent.

Here's The Plumb Bob

It's just another proof that Tubular Cream Separators are just up to the minute—miles ahead of anyother. No other machine has it.

What's It For?

It enables you to level the Sharples Dairy Tubular Cream Separator in a minute—quicker than you could find the spirit level you must use to level all other separators. A glance at the plumb bob, hanging there on the back of the Tubular, will always tell you whether the Tubular remains level. In that way you get the very best work out of the Tubular, for all Separators should be kept level to do their best work.

Tubulars have dozens of exclusive fine points and are sold on the level. Bring the wife in. See how simple, perfect and different from others Tubulars are.

GET LIVING AMUSING OTHERS

Roughly Estimated, Ten Per Cent. of the Population Caters to the Pleasure of the Rest.

It has been roughly estimated that 10 per cent. of us, the people of the United States, keep busy and earn our living by amusing the other 90 per cent., according to the World's Work. This 10 per cent. includes those who do the actual work of amusing; singers in grand opera, light opera, concert; actors in the "legitimate" theaters, vaudeville, in burlesque, in small shows; performers in the various departments of the innumerable circuses, carnivals, street fairs, baseball players, football players, basket ball players, motor races, aviators, boxers, innumerable exponents of innumerable forms of professional sports.

It includes also the people who promote these amusements; who incorporate companies and manufacture devices to be used in amusing—film companies with armies of employes in the moving picture field, for example; the people in their large office forces; the people who manage and direct theaters, amusement parks, race courses, athletic fields, etc.; stage hands, mechanicians, electricians and employes in countless other ramifications of the general business of amusement.

It includes those who originate schemes of entertainment, those who finance them, those who manage them, those who execute them, those press agents, advance men, sign painters, "spielers" and "barkers," etc., who advertise them and draw the attention of the rest of us—the patrons who comprise the other 90 per cent.

OTHER "ISTS" A POOR SECOND

Pessimist and Optimist Alike Had to Yield the Palm to the Quiet, Undisturbed Fatalist.

Three students of philosophy sat on top of a high hill. One was a pessimist, one an optimist and the third had not declared himself.

While the first were warmly discussing their opposing theories of life, a sudden gust of wind simultaneously lifted off three hats and sent them bowling down the hill. The pessimist and the optimist gave chase, but their companion remained calmly sitting on top of the hill and watched the others running after the hats. Presently each procured his own hat and the optimist picked up also that of the third man. Then they panted back up the hill.

"Whew!" gasped the optimist, as he handed over the hat to him who still sat on top of the hill. "I guess you're an optimist, too. You didn't seem to worry any."

"Why should I?" was the dispassionate reply. "I knew that 'mine own shall come to me.' You see, I am a fatalist."—Lippincott's Magazine.

Good Air in the House.

Good air in the house is as much a necessity to health as clean water, and, inasmuch as a considerable portion of the air in the house rises from the cellar, the cellar must be as clean and pure as it is desired that the house atmosphere shall be. In the absence of any ventilating system, windows and doors must do the work of bringing in and letting out the air. The impure air must escape to make room for pure air. Open the windows at the top as well at the bottom, the warmer air at the top of the room will thus pass out. Keep one window on the top floor open a little most of the time to provide a general air-escape for the whole house. When airing bedrooms in the morning leave the cupboard door open. A sleeping room used as a sitting room during the day must be given a good airing before bedtime. The bath room and the kitchen need special ventilation, and the living room must be well aired the last thing at night, otherwise the used-up air will make its way through the house.

Retort of John Wilkes.

In the days when George III. was king, and when his periodic lapses into infirmity of mind brought about resumptions of the regency and changes of policy, there was an English lord chancellor who trimmed his sails to the doctor's bulletins. He was a politician of a type with which we are all too familiar. He heard one day that the king was better and would resume the reins of office, and he made an impassioned speech against the regency in the house of lords. In his peroration he cried, "I cannot forget all that I owe to the bounty of my gracious sovereign; and when I forget him, may my God forget me!" He was impressed with the magnificence of his own oratory, and could not refrain from repeating the last phrase to John Wilkes, whom he met in Westminster hall after the debate. "Forget you!" said Wilkes. "He'll see you damned first."—Wall Street Journal.

Arranging Flowers.

To arrange flowers the best way take a lesson from the fields, woods or garden where you find them growing. Where red and white clover, daisies and grasses are found, arrange them in a loose bouquet to look just as they grew; and, as these are unpretentious flowers, do not put them in a glass vase, but rather choose an ordinary vessel—a brown unglazed pot, a gray Chinese ginger jar or an earthen crock. The effect will be artistic. Indeed, the finding of exactly the right vessel for every flower is a delightful study, just as well as to the proper arrangement of the flowers themselves.

HIS FIRST PUBLISHED WORK

Probably Nothing He Did in After Life Gave Benjamin Franklin More Exquisite Pleasure.

My brother had, in 1720 or 1721, begun to print a newspaper, relates Benjamin Franklin in his autobiography. It was the second that appeared in America and was called the New England Courant. The only one before it was the Boston News Letter. I remember him being dissuaded by some of his friends from the undertaking as not likely to succeed, one newspaper being in their judgment, enough for America. At this time (1771) there are not less than five and twenty. He went on, however, with the undertaking, and, after having worked in composing the types and printing off the sheets, I was employed to carry the papers through the streets to the customers.

He had some ingenious men among his friends, who amused themselves by writing little pieces for his paper, which gained it credit and made it more in demand, and these gentlemen often visited us. Hearing their conversations and their accounts of the approbation their papers were received with, I was excited to try my hand among them, but, being still a boy and suspecting that my brother would object to printing anything of mine in his paper if he knew it to be mine, I contrived to disguise my hand and, writing an anonymous paper, I put it at night under the door of the printing house. It was found in the morning and communicated to his writing friends when they called in as usual. They read it, commented on it in my hearing, and I had the exquisite pleasure of finding it met with their approbation, and that, in their different guesses at the author, none were named but men of some character among us for learning and ingenuity. I suppose now that I was rather lucky in my judges, and that perhaps they were not really so very good ones as I then esteemed them.

MANY AND STRANGE DIALECTS

In Standardizing Her Language China Is Facing a Problem England Has Not Yet Solved.

China will have to start on a kind of standardization of her language, as we started, seriously, in the fourteenth century. It isn't only a matter of words and grammar; more important still are construction and pronunciation. Our English dialects are probably as diverse as any. Put a Cornish miner and a Northumberland miner together for the first time and each would only have a faint glimmering of the meaning of the other's speech. What would the Cornishman think of "What mak' o' yan is sha?" He would express the same meaning in "What be her like, then?" The ordinary English, of course, is "What is she like?" I have known a Londoner, fresh to the fine Dorset dialect, completely bewildered by a farm laborer's talk; he could only get a glint of meaning here and there.—London Chronicle.

At first, it has been contended, men used both arms indifferently, and those who when fighting pushed the right side forward had the advantage of shielding their hearts and so lived to produce descendants who inherited their tendencies. Be this as it may, there is no doubt that the two sides of the brain have different functions, and right or left-handedness is by no means restricted to the arms alone. One investigator was very often able to recognize left-handedness by the examination of the left eye. The center of speech is on the left side of the brain of a right-handed person, and on the right side of that of a left-handed person. Children show unmistakable evidence of two speech centers, though one atrophies owing to the preference given to one hand. Nevertheless, experiments show that it can be successfully resuscitated.—Knowledge.

Unconventionalities.

"It was printed in your paper, was it, mister? That's the reason I didn't see it."

"You don't seem to notice, Gerald, that it's nearly midnight, and I'm yawning to beat the band!"

"There's no need of your apologizing for these sliced tomatoes, Mrs. Nayber; I saw they were spoiled, and I haven't touched 'em."

"Yes, I notice, Mrs. Sykes, that your boy Bill takes my Mary Jane to the moving picture shows quite often. What she sees in him I can't imagine."

"Oh, well, Mrs. Glizzard, my Bill goes to see your Mary Jane because nobody else does; he kind o' pities her."—Chicago Tribune.

Treatment for Nervous Child.

With highly strung children there is a sad readiness to pick up nervous tricks from their elders. Thus from one he learns to stammer, while from another he adopts various nervous movements of the muscles of the face or limbs. Such children need to be well fed and kept as much as possible in the open air, to lead a quiet life without excitement, and without overexercise of the brain. Above all, they must be kept as much as possible away from those people from whom they seem to be taking the tricks of nervousness.

Ticklish Question.

"Is your wife truthful when it comes to telling her age?"

"Yes. But try asking her once how much she weighs."

LIGHT THAT PRODUCES SOUND

Statement Sounds Incredible, but Experiment Will Speedily Demonstrate It to Be a Fact.

It seems incredible that a beam of light sould be made to produce sound, but such a thing can be done. A ray of sunlight is thrown through a lens on a glass vessel containing lampblack, colored silk or worsted, or any like substance. A disk having slits or openings cut in it is made to revolve swiftly in this beam of light, so as to "cut it up," thus causing alternate flashes of light and shadow. When one places his ear to the glass vessel he hears strange sounds so long as the flashing beam falls upon the vessel.

A still more extraordinary effect is produced when the beam of sunlight is made to pass through a prism, so as to produce what is called the solar spectrum. The disk is turned and the colored light of the rainbow is made to break through it. Now, if the ear be placed to the vessel containing the silk or other material, as the colored lights of the spectrum fall upon it, sounds will be given by the different parts of the spectrum and there will be silence in other parts.

For example, if the vessel contains red worsted and the green light flashes upon it, loud sounds will be heard when the red and the blue parts of the rainbow fall upon the vessel. Other colors produce no sounds at all.

Green silk gives out sound best in a red light. Every kind of material gives more or less sound in different colors and no sound at all in others.—Harper's Weekly.

WORLD'S DEBT TO VEGETABLE

Possibly Sun Worship Had Its Origin in Knowledge of the Fact of the Dependence.

Vegetable life may worry along without animals, but animal life can't continue without vegetables. Therefore, says an English chemist, man owes a great debt of gratitude to the vegetable. He should do his best to foster it. It is not intimated neither this is an argument in favor of the theories advanced by the vegetarian, but it is considered ample proof man would not be here only for the humble vegetable kingdom.

But vegetables, like animate life, are dependent upon sunlight for their existence. The vegetable, however, is both the direct and the indirect sustenance of animal being. Animal life of certain species exists solely, or almost so, on the flesh of other animals. But that latter food eventually is dependent upon the vegetable. Time would eradicate animate life should inanimate cease to exist. The relations between plant and animal form a beautiful dispensation. Man owes to the vegetable more than he does to lower animal life.

"Thus," concludes this chemist, "isn't it possible the sun worshipers perhaps had a greater realization of the value of Old Sol than we of the present century?"

Livingstone's Resourcefulness.

David Livingstone, explorer and missionary, was a man of varied accomplishments. Besides getting himself taught on board ship, and later by Sir Thomas Maclear, to take with great accuracy astronomical observations for fixing latitude and longitude, besides acquainting himself with botany and geology, with patriotic literature and Egyptology, Livingstone was an excellent mechanic, a steersman and a mariner. His resourcefulness was at all times remarkable. When he was hard up for fuel on his first steamer journey up the River Shire he landed in the elephant marsh. Here no trees existed and no fuel was obtainable, but his men found many bones of slaughtered elephants. Livingstone at once took the bones on board, burned them in the furnaces of the Ma-robert, and so continued his journey.

A moving picture concern recently obtained permission to take a series of moving pictures illustrating French parliamentary life. Legislators soon got to hear of the matter, says Les Nouvelles, some of them showing themselves particularly anxious to figure on the film. The taking of the film lasted several days, and the operator took pictures of the chamber at all times. Photographs will show the deserted benches of the morning, with a dozen or so deputies discussing laws affecting the whole of France, the solemn arrival of the president, life in the lobbies, a stormy afternoon session and the thronged refreshment bar.

Very Rapid Descent.

At the exhibition of post-impressionist paintings in New York two Boston men were standing in front of the much-talked-of canvas alleged to represent a figure descending the stairs.

"This is the worst yet," cried one. "Look at it! It is simply a tangled mass of streaks and splotches."

"I think," said the other, after gazing at it a moment, "that the fault lies in the title, which is not sufficiently explanatory. It should tell us that it is a figure descending the stairs after the careless scrub woman had left a cake of soap on the top step."

State News.

The floater was missing Saturday, as there was no room for him in this election.—Berry Citizen.

A prese dispatch states that the crop of mules is running short. A great many two-legged ones can be furnished by LaRue county.—LaRue Herald.

As we predicted last week the primary election held Saturday was universally pronounced the most corrupt ever held in the county.—Glasgow Republican.

The primary is the only satisfactory method of naming candidates, for then every voter, however humble, has a voice in selecting those who shall be the standard bearers, and having taken part in selecting the candidates, he feels an interest in them and wants to see them elected and is willing to work to that end.—Richmond Climax.

A horse belonging to Mr. Errington, of Floral, caused some excitement here Tuesday. The horse which was tied to the dashboard of the buggy became frightened, began pulling back, and bringing the buggy over the freeing itself of everything but the dashboard, it ran around the court house square and then ran in the side door of the court house and was caught in the hall.—Hancock Clarion.

Mr. W. C. Wilkerson, of Rush Branch, made a bad shot one night last week, and it was an accidental one, some dogs were fighting in a lot and he procured his revolver and fired at them. His fine mare was in the lot and in the range of the dogs when the shot was fired, the ball striking the mare inflicting a fatal wound, from the effects of which it died the next day. Mr. Wilkerson had refused $200 for the animal on two occasions.—Campbellsville Journal.

J. C. Spratt, the well known farmer, a outh of town, killed two of the biggest rattlesnakes ever seen in his community last week. He killed them on the old Bailey Anderson farm at a saw mill, and it was all he and his son Otis, who was with him at the time could do to get the best of the big serpents. One of them had ten rattles and a button and the other had eleven and a button, proving each to have been over ten years of age. Mr. Spratt says that they were larger around the body than his wrist and were fighters from away back.—Stanford Interior-Journal.

Handling the Foal.

The earlier a colt is made used to the harness, the better broken the animal will be after it comes time for him to do some light work. It is easier to keep colts from learning bad tricks than to break them of such. For this reason, have every strap and rope used by the colt so strong that there is no danger of a break. Once a colt finds out that he can get away from the halter or other part of the harness, there will be trouble, perhaps for a time. It is not necessary to make idle pets of young foals, but they should be taught to lead at the halter, stand tied in their stalls, as well as display manners in the stable, wisely suggests a horse trainer, and he adds: A wild, tricky, foal unbroken when young makes a double task when subjected to the break harness as a three year old. Their first lessons are never forgotten and it pays to master them when young.

A vast amount of ill health is due to impaired digestion. When the stomach fails to perform its functions properly the whole system becomes deranged. A few doses of Chamberlain's Tablets is all you need. They will strengthen your digestion, invigorate your liver, and regulate your bowels, entirely doing away with that miserable feeling due to faulty digestion. Try it. Many others have been permanently cured—why not you? For sale by J. W. Berkshire and Son and E. E. Kelly.

For Sale—Nine hogs, will weigh about 100 pounds. Apply to L. T. Clore, Burlington, Ky.

Jr., and daughter, Miss Lulu.

F. E. Curley, of Tuscon, Arizona, arrived here Monday to attend the bedside of his little daughter Marie, who has been ill with fever at the home of her grandfather S. L. Edwards. The little one was much better upon his arrival. Mr. Curley is City Attorney of Tuscon and has made good in every particular, enjoying the confidence and esteem of all the people of his adopted home.

Last Thursday Dr. B. K. Menefee was called to near Napoleon, Gallatin county, to attend the fourteen year old son of Wm. Speagle, who was thrown from a wagon and the lines becoming entangled about his body he was dragged considerable distance and suffered a fracture of the skull. Dr. Menefee, with the assistance of Dr. C. C. Metcalfe rendered all assistance possible but the boy died.

Geo. P. Nicholson, the contractor who has the building of the new edifice for the Walton Baptist church in hand, has been busy this week moving the parsonage to one side of the lot for the purpose of laying the foundation of the new building for the church. The distance to which the residence is to be moved is about sixty feet, and the work is being very neatly done without the disturbance of Rev. Wayman and family who occupy the parsonage.

Dr. H. W. Hamilton, formerly of this place, but now of Chicago, where he has a large office for the dental practice, was here several days this week practicing his profession—catering to the wants of a number of his former patients. He has been enjoying a vacation at his home at Verona. Doctor's many friends in this locality were pleased to meet him after an absence of about nine months. He is enjoying a fine practice in the windy city but has a warm feeling for his old Kentucky Home.

Last week A. W. Smith received the sad intelligence of the death of his sister, Mrs. John R. Fish, at her home in Dallas, Texas. She had been discharged from a hospital after a surgical operation for an affection of the liver, but complications setting up she expired on Sunday, Aug. 3d. Mrs. Fish was about 53 years old and was born and raised in Burlington, where she was very popular and loved and respected by all who knew her. She leaves a husband and four children to mourn the loss of a kind and loving mother and wife. Her sorrowing relatives in this quarter are A. W. Smith, Walton; Mrs. O. M. Rogers and Henley Smith, of Erlanger. Mrs. Fish's husband is a railroad accountant and they had traveled various parts of the United States but lived mostly in the south.

Last Saturday evening quite a number of friends assembled at the residence of Judge J. G. Tomlin and bride to welcome them home from their bridal tour through Western Canada, and also to present them with an elegant and beautiful punch bowl. Rev. H. C. Wayman made the speech of presentation to which Judge Tomlin most feelingly responded. Then followed a very social and enjoyable time, the guests remaining for some time. The following were the donors, part of whom were present: G. B. Powers, Rev. H. C. Wayman and wife, J. L. Vest and wife, R. L. Ratcliff and wife, J. C. Miller and wife, J. M. Stamler and wife, R. F. DeMoisey and wife, Miss Graham Roberts, Dr. and Mrs. D. M. Bayby, L. S. Wolfe and wife, Mrs. Julia Rouse, Lambert Hopkins and wife, E. P. Northcutt and wife, and daughter Miss Mamie, E. K. Stephens and wife, James Jones and wife, Dr. William Stout and wife, C. L. Griffith, Dr. G. C. Rankins and wife, E. M. Johnson and wife, W. L. Johnson and wife, Dr. B. K. Menefee and wife, Wallace Garrison and wife, W. T. Dudgeon and wife, Geo. P. Nicholson and wife, D. B. Wallace, C. S. Chambers, Frank B. Hamilton, Mrs. Alice Booths, S. C. Hicks and wife, A. W. Smith, Mosby Allen, A. M. Edwards and wife, W. H. Cram.

A BARGAIN—If sold before August 25th, 36 acres of land, new frame house and barn, adjacent to South Walton, on Lexington pike, at sidewalk termination. W. B. Johnson.

ERLANGER.

Little Miss Maud J. Miller is visiting relatives at Big Bone Springs.

The C. W. B. M. of the Christian church held a monthly meeting, Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. John Broughton are rejoicing over the arrival of a little daughter.

Rev. Chas. L. Garrison has returned from a week's vacation spent at Blue Lick Springs.

BASE BALL.

The reorganized Erlanger ball team came over last Saturday and caught the Burlington team minus four players and its catcher ready for the hospital, but the game was put on and resulted in a score of 10 to 9 in favor of the visitors. The feature of the game was Slater's batting and fielding and Bramlage's home run with three men on bases ahead of him. Conner hit the longest ball in the history of the park but only one man was ahead of him. Davis, who subbed at second for Burlington was knocked out for a while from a shake-up sliding to second, while Huey was hurt twice at second and had to be assisted home. The disabled managed to stay in the game, in fact they had to for the game could not proceed without them.

Hebron defeated Belleview at Hebron last Saturday 14 to 11.

Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Kirkpatrick entertained the following with a six o'clock dinner last Monday: Mrs. Annabel Kirkpatrick and daughter, Miss Olga and Mrs. Ora L. Ware, of Roachdale, Ind.; Mrs. H. W. Ryle, of Erlanger; Mrs. W. E. Piper, of Cincinnati; Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Kirkpatrick, Mr. and Mrs. Newton Sullivan, Jr., Mrs. Susan Kirkpatrick, Mrs. Lavina Kirkpatrick and daughter, Miss Besse, and W. D. Cropper.

Those having business with the Boone County Fire Insurance Co., should remember that the agent's address is R. W. Rouse, Burlington, Ky., R. D. 3.

A prize waltz picnic will be given at Harvest Home grounds next Saturday afternoon. See the advertisement in another column.

Mrs. P. A. Ryle and Mrs. Kirb Tanner, who were operated on a few days ago in Cincinnati hospitals, are improving nicely.

J. N. Gibson, of Union, has several fine sheep for sale. His ad. mailed to this office failed to come in.

Watermelons are coming up in quantities this week from the Belleview fields.

The Recorder will carry next week Dr. M. J. Crouch's article on good roads.

It looked Wednesday morning like a good rain was near at hand.

Dry weather has not interfered with the growth of the weeds.

LEWIS AYLOR DEAD.

Lewis Aylor, son of the late Absalom Aylor, died at his home on the road between Burlington and Hebron, about 12 o'clock last Monday night, after a few hours illness of peritonitis. Mr. Aylor was a bachelor, about 50 years of age, and made his home with his mother and sister. He was never robust and had been complaining for several days, but nothing serious was suspected until a few hours before he died. He was a good neighbor, a good citizen and a kind and affectionate son and brother, and will be greatly missed by all. The remains were interred yesterday in the family cemetery on the old Aylor homestead near Limaburg.

Still Harping on Kentucky.

The fiction—polite or impolite according to your view—that Kentuckians who are not habitually under the influence of whisky are those to whom whisky is a beverage that has ceased to have any marked effect, persists.

"A lemonade in Kentucky?" queries a New York paper, anent an article in the Courier-Journal recommending lemonade as a good hot weather beverage. "Why not a mint julip?" asks another contemporary. "Too hot for whisky straight in Louisville?" asks a third, and a fourth observes that Kentuckians may preach lemonade, but they are more inclined to practice sour mash. And so runs the comment from Maine to California, and from Michigan to Florida.

How many millions of dollars the humorous "foreign" conception of the Kentuckians have been worth to the distilleries it would be hazardous to guess. Of course, the distilleries are welcome to the advertising. Its exaggeration robs it of its sting. Only those who are professionally humorous, and by vocation siolators of all truths that stand in the way of jest, conceive of the Kentuckians as a man with a flowing mustache, a pointed beard, a slouch hat, a bulginghip pocket, a bottle bigger than his pistol and his affections divided between politics, the turf, the tipple and shooting affrays.

As a picturesque character the Kentuckian has an unquestioned, if unenviable place in very light literature and day by day humor which makes no literary claim for itself. "Without pain or suffering without loss of time or detention to business," as the medicine advertisements put it, the Kentuckian fulfills this public function while drinking much less and living more simply, and in ninety-nine cases in 100, just as law abidingky, as his neighbors in New York. Without him the humorists would be as hard put to it as if mothers-in-law, country cousins, stern papas of pretty daughters, and newly-weds should cease to exist in fact and in pop ular fancy.—Courier-Journal.

The French army needs 70,000 horses, and the shortage in the country is estimated at over 200,000. The cause of it is attributed to the fact that rapid multiplication of motorcars led to the neglect of horse breeding.

BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

VOL. XXXVIII. Established 1875. BURLINGTON, KENTUCKY, THURSDAY, AUGUST 21, 1913. $1.50 Per Year. NO. 47.

NEXT YEAR

The Christian Bible School Will Meet At Walton.

Highly Entertained by the People of Florence Last Thursday.

The twelfth annual convention of the Christian Bible Schools of Boone county met at Florence August 4th.

The first address in the morning was "The purpose of Our Convention," by the President, Edgar C. Riley. He very clearly presented the great benefits derived from this important annual meeting.

Bro. S. S. Lappin followed, giving us a great vision in "Training for Christian Leadership." Three great essentials he presented in this important task—the training of our physical, intellectual and moral natures.

On account of the absence of Bro. Bornmeser, Walter E. Frazee, the State Supt., took charge of his subject, "Ideals for the Country Sunday School," in a very practical manner. Four ideals were given, namely—every church member enrolled, punctuality, cordiality and trained leadership.

The last address in the morning was a Message from the State Worker. Some of the plans of the State for making the schools more efficient were the Weekly Bulletin, a central School of Methods and the exploiting of the Front Bank Stanard.

The roll call of the schools showed every school officially represented, and reported but one, and that alone, kept us from being a Banner County.

The committee on resolutions clearly presented the work for the coming year. First—that every school in the county shall be represented at the Front Rank School. Second—that the chairman shall appoint a committee to meet quarterly at the various churches in the county for the purpose of studying the needs and interests of the churches. Said committee to be known as the committee of ten and to report at the next annual convention.

The Department Conference was led by Bros. Frazee, Runyan and Lappin. The three important devisions, elementary, secondary and adult were ably discussed.

The two last addresses in the afternoon were by Bro. Kohler and Bro. Frazee on "The Training of the Child," and The World's Sunday School Convention. The first, the elementary address of the day was an important addition to the program and was given in a forcible and entertaining manner. The account of the World's Sunday School Convention completed the vision of service consecration and sacrifice.

The Convention adjourned to meet in Walton next year. Everyone was deeply impressed with the cordial hospitality of the Florence people, and even the down pour of rain during the day was taken in the spirit of the resolution committee, who thanked the Giver of all good and perfect gifts, for the magnificent rain sent to refresh the land and cheer the hearts of the people on the day of our convention.

BASE BALL.

Bellevue Beaten by Lawrenceburg and Burlington Licks The Dry Ridgers.

The Lawrenceburg team defeated Belleview last Saturday afternoon. Bachelor, who pitched for Lawrenceburg, is a great box artist and with fine support given him, held the Belleview sluggers to two hits. Lawrenceburg got 9 off of Rogers, who pitched good ball, but his support was raw in spots. Slayback umpired strikes and balls and Vessenmyer, the bases, and there was not a disputed decision.

The Burlington base ball team went to Dry Ridge, Grant county, last Sunday, and defeated the strong team there 6 to 7. It was anybody's game up to the eighth inning when Burlington began a batting rally in which the team won out. Both pitchers were hit hard until the 8th inning when Brady tightened up and held the opponents runless while Burlington made four runs for him. Hager caught six innings, giving away to Slayback for the last three. Bramlage, of Erlanger, who was playing with Burlington was hit on the temple by a pitched ball and had to quit the game, while Harry Slater, also of Erlanger, and assisting Burlington, fell backward over a stone wall when trying to field a fly ball and was hurt and taken out.

The high price of 17 cents per pound for tobacco is being turned down by farmers of this county. The drouth has cut the crop short and there is no telling how high the price of the weed will go. It is said that the high price of 20 cents is being offered the farmers of Mason county for tobacco.—Carlisle Advocate.

Right, You Are Brother.

One of W. T. Stott's ante-election promises, is, "If I win, I will be in Burlington on the first Monday in September with a two-horse wagon load of fine watermelons to hand out free.—Boone County Recorder.

Mr. Stott lives in Petersburg and won the Democratic nomination for Representative and there is not the least doubt but what he will keep his ante-election promise.—Carrollton News.

Ferryboat Sold.

Joseph C. Darroset and Joseph Bihr have bought the ferryboats and privileges of Jacob Rief. Mr. Darroset has been pilot on the ferryboat Carolyn about two years. The new owners promise to maintain the standard of good service with Captain Rief inaugurated when he acquired possession.—Lawrenceburg Press.

COURT ADJOURNS

After a Week's Session—Much Business Disposed Of.

Circuit court adjourned about noon last Saturday after a week's hard work in which an unusually large amount of business was disposed of and the docket is nearer clear than it has been in many years. Judge Cammack worked early and late, showing the attorneys and litigants the greatest consideration in every instance.

William Bell, the negro who was indicted for killing the two negroes at the Richwood railroad camp several weeks ago, plead guilty to manslaughter and was sentenced for from two to twenty years in the penitentiary.

The suit of Mrs. Nannie Gaines against the estate of her late husband, Benj. R. Gaines, was decided in favor of the estate. Mr. and Mrs. Gaines had an ante-nuptial contract by which he was to give her $5,000. Later Mr. Gaines made a will in which he gave her about $4,000 in addition to the amount set out in the ante-nuptial contract. After the death of Mr. Gaines Mrs. Gaines renounced the will and brought suit for a widow's share of the estate. By the judgment rendered in the suit Mrs. Gaines loses the amount she would have received under the will and will receive only the amount set out in the ante-nuptial contract. The case will be taken to the court of appeals.

The grand jury returned four indictments, one of them being against William Bell, colored, who plead guilty to manslaughter, and the others were for minor offenses.

Hon. W. W. Dickerson, of Cincinnati, remained with the court until it adjourned finally.

The grand and petit jurors for the term cost $286.

In six and one-half busy days a court can dispose of considerable business.

Mr. W. S. Gunsalus, a farmer living near Fleming, Pa., says he has used Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy in his family for fourteen years, and that he has found it to be an excellent remedy, and takes pleasure in recommending it. For sale by J. W. Berkshire & Son and E. E. Kelly.

MAKE MERRY

Was The Motto at the Barlow Outing Last Saturday.

People From All Parts of The County Present and Enjoy The Barlow Hospitality.

The largest social event ever held in this county, growing out of a political victory, was that given Saturday by J. M. Barlow, of Gunpowder neighborhood in honor of his son-in-law, W. P. Beemon, who was nominated by the Democrats for assessor at the primary election on the second day of this month. The crowd in attendance was composed of people from every neighborhood in the county and was estimated at 500 to 1000. To feed the assemblage an abundance of fish, beef, bread and watermelons had been provided while there were cigars for everybody.

The soup kettles were under the very efficient supervision of L. H. Busby, of Gunpowder, who had the able assistance of several.

Willis Grant was chief of the fish friers and was assisted by five or six expert cooks, among them Chas. Garnett, Lester Gulley, Perry Barlow and others.

Arch Acra devoted his time to seeing that the fish were properly prepared for the culinary artists who gave them the finishing touches.

Nor was the history of the county was a better humored crowd ever gotten together. Notwithstanding it was excessively warm no person was in the least inconvenienced and be merry and make merry was the motto of every guest, an example for which was set by Mr. Barlow and Mr. Beemon and every member of their estimable families. Nothing on the Barlow premises was too good for anyone in the crowd, and to speak plainly, Uncle Jas. M., was as near heaven as it is possible for one to attain in this world. He met every person with a bland smile and a hearty handshake that will never be forgotten by those who responded to the invitation to participate in the festal event.

Mr. Beemon, in whose honor the occasion was gotten up, made it his business to give everyone present a welcome hand, and his happiness was exceeded only by that of Mr. Barlow.

Just about the time the demands of the inner man had been thoroughly satisfied a refreshing shower of rain drove the people to shelter, and for in no wise detracted from the pleasures of the occasion, the little inconvenience not being appreciable as compared with the glorious occasion.

It was getting late in the afternoon before the last of the guests had taken their departure for home, all declaring that Mr. Barlow's "fish fry" marked a new epoch in the celebration of political triumphs, and shouting if its success be equaled again in the future.

DOWN IN SWEET OWEN.

(Owen Co. Democrat.)

In the little town of Owenton we have an individual who is always on hands during each session of court and when any election is to be pulled off, he knows all about everything. He consults the lawyers and the politicians. He is always ready to help you if you have any work to do, but he never shows up to do it. He always needs a few groceries until Saturday night for which he will pay you with his hot air speel. He is up early with his news and stays late. You have seen him. He owns the wisdom of the country but no property.

If any of you country people think you can tell a big snake story or any other kind of a story, just come in some day when you are not busy and we will show you a citizen of this town who has never been beaten. He is somewhat of a ladies man but when it comes to just common ordinary lying, he holds the winning record. He likes to tell them and is a good natured cuss and don't mean any harm by wasting his time telling these big tales but come in and we will bet a gill of sour butter milk that he can out lie any man in the county. We were hucky to have two of these individuls but luckily for the other moved away. Fix up a good story and come in and we will trot our man out.

Quick Time to the Fairs.

I will take passengers to the Erlanger and Florence Fairs, on the following schedule:

Leaving Burlington at 7:30 a. m., 9:30 a. m., 11:30 a. m. Fare, to Erlanger, 75 cents, to Florence 50 cents round trip.

JACK EDDINS.

Will Meet in Burlington.

The annual session of the North Bend Association of Baptists will be held with Burlington Baptist church on Wednesday and Thursday, September 10th and 11th, and it is time you were making up the list of good things with which you will serve to the people who attend.

PETERSBURG.

Mr. Carter and the men employed by him have about completed the razing of the old building formerly used as a store by Berkshire & Son. Work on the new Odd-Fellows' hall will begin as soon as the old building is removed.

John H. Jarrell was born July 16, 1841, and departed this life Sunday morning, August 10, 1913. Mr. Jarrell was born in this county and has been a resident of this town many years.

On Nov. 22, 1864, Mr. Jarrell was married to Amanda C. Hensley. To this union five children were born, four of them dying of diphtheria in 1882.

Mr. Jarrell united with the Bullittsburg Baptist church in 1874 and was a faithful and loyal member.

In March Mr. Jarrell suffered a light stroke of paralysis which at length culminated in his death. He was perfectly willing and ready to go and prayed that he would die easily, which prayer was answered.

His wife and daughter have no memory of unkindness or neglect shown him during his illness, for they patiently cared for him and ministered to him thru the long months. They have much to comfort them in their grief for they did all in their power to let him down gently into the dark valley. Mr. Jarrell was a quiet and amiable citizen and a good neighbor. The funeral service was held at the family residence Tuesday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock and was in charge of the K. of P. Lodge of which Mr. Jarrell had been a member since 1869.

Rev. Campbell conducted the funeral and the remains were laid to rest in the cemetery below town there to await the judgment morn.

Card of Thanks.—We wish to extend thanks to everyone for the many kindnesses shown us in our sad bereavement. Especially do we wish to thank the minister, Rev. Campbell, the lodge members and the undertaker, Mr. Stier, for the efficient way everything was managed.

His wife and Daughter.

Colin Kelly smoothed that part of the road near his house by dragging it after last Thursday's rain, helping travel wonderfully. Lick creek residents have taken the road out of the creek for a distance of 200 yards, another much needed improvement. The time will soon be here when we will have better roads. People are aroused as never before, and there will be something doing when the parcel post weight reaches 50 pounds.

The S. W. ball club of Lawrenceburg came down Saturday and defeated the local club in a very neat manner by closing them out 6 to 0. "Bear" Bachelor, notice that first name, who pitched for Lawreneburg was almost invincible, the locals being able to connect safely only twice, Robt. Brady getting a two bagger and Less Ryle a single, being the extent of Belleview's batting. Lawrenceburg got nine hits which, with two costly errors, netted them six runs. Struck out—by Bachelor six, by Rogers seven. Lawrenceburg has the best team that has played here this season and the boys want them to come again.

Speakers on Home Making Have Been Secured For the Barbecue at Versailles, Aug. 20

A BARBECUE has usually stood for politics and men only. The big Camden barbecue is to be educational and is to include the farmers' wives in the makeup of its splendid program. No effort will be spared to make the farmers' wives and daughters comfortable when they attend this huge meeting. A special rest tent will be provided for the ladies, and a physician will be in attendance.

In reading over the program which has been issued in the last week one is very much impressed with the fact that the major portion of the speakers will talk on co-operation and the marketing of crops instead of increased production of crops. For a long time the farmer has thought that increased production would solve all of his problems, but he now realizes that he must learn more about marketing his crop when made and financing it before it is made. Mr. J. C. Caldwell, or, as his friends and neighbors call him, Jim Caldwell of Lakefield, Minn., will talk on "The Farmer and His Finances." He is a man who speaks from a wide experience, an experience that embraces the launching of a co-operative elevator, a farmers' bank, a co-operative store, a co-operative creamery and, last and by no means the least, a co-operative church. He will have something to say that will get close to the people, for he is one of the people. He is not an expert or a theorist, but a man who has accomplished things in everyday life. It might be well to mention the fact that he is just home from an extended trip abroad with the commission which has been studying foreign methods of farmers' credit and co-operation.

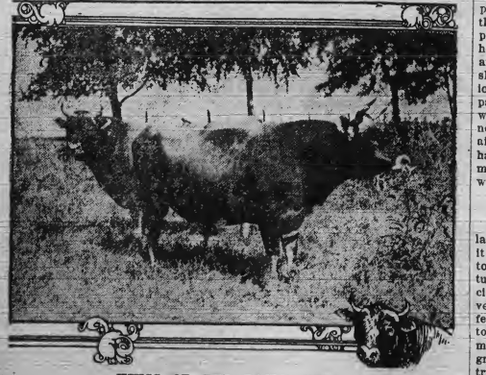
Professor Charles J. Brand, assistant in charge of the bureau of marketing, Washington, will tell of the work of his department in "Co-operative Farm Marketing." Mr. E. M. Tousley, who is editor of Co-operation and also secretary of the Right Relationship league, will discuss "Co-operation." The Farmers' Educational Co-operative Union of America will be represented by Mr. R. L. Barnett, who will discuss "The Farmers' Union."

Professor Cyrus W. Hopkins of the great University of Illinois has been secured to tell something of "Soil Conservation." The chief of the farmers'



SOME HAMPSHIRE DOWNS.

co-operative demonstration work, Dr. Bradford Knapp, will explain the plans and the hopes of his department in "Farm Extension Work," while Dr. Fred Mutchler, in charge of the work in Kentucky, will tell something of the "Boys and Girls' Demonstration Work." Our own commissioner of agriculture, Hon. J. W. Newman, is to talk on "State Aid."

Several other speakers are being considered, besides those for the farmers' wives, so that two speakers' stands may be used at a time and accommodate any crowd which may come to the barbecue.

Every part of the Camden farm will be open for inspection on the day of the barbecue—everything from the sixty acre field that has been in alfalfa for the past fifteen years to the thoroughbreds in the stables or the bunch of Shetland ponies, with their fouls by their sides. There will be no effort at a display of the stock of any character, but the people are expected to go about, inspect and ask questions as if they were attending a one day session of a great farmers' school. It is intended, after all, to be a great place of instruction and "getting together" and breaking bread together.

In Warren county in the past few weeks the farmers, their wives and sons and daughters, have been "getting together" in a series of farmers' Chautauquas. Each one has been a district affair. The barbecue at Versailles is being developed in exactly this same spirit. It is the same feeling showing in a different manner. The barbecue is not a "getting together" of a neighborhood or a county of farmers and their friends, but of the whole state. And that it may be something more than the hearing of good talks, beeves and sheep will be slaughtered and burgoo made so that it may be a picnic, a social gathering, smacking of the older days of Kentucky hospitality.

Things are happening in Kentucky. Every day things are happening in the dear old state. It seems that after her long nap she is rousing herself, and that she may never doze again night schools, Chautauquas, farmers' night schools, boys and girls' clubs and barbecues are being launched here and there.

Let each and every one that can put everything aside and come to Versailles to pledge his or her faith in a Greater Kentucky through better farming; pledge his or her faith in the old state in a steaming royal mug of burgoo.

ADVOCATES TAX ON BABIES

Frenchwoman Would Penalize Parents of "Little Stranger," but Her Idea Is Not New.

A tax on babies!

That is the remedy proposed by Mme. du Morier of Versailles, France. Mme. du Morier declares that if parents had to pay a tax on babies people would think more carefully before bringing "little strangers" into the world, and that it would be one step forward to "better babies."

This would not be the first tax on babies, however, for in 1695 there was an actual tax on babies in England. A tax of two shillings had to be paid at the birth of each baby. This fell very heavily upon the parents, for at that time a shilling meant much more than it does today. The nobility, too, felt the burden of the taxes, for each baby was taxed according to rank, and the birth of a child of a duke added thirty pounds to the revenue.

Beards were once the subject of taxation. In the time of Peter the Great each man was taxed one hundred rubles if he wore a beard. Queen Elizabeth put a tax upon beards, too, and each man was taxed three farthings for a beard of a fortnight's growth.

Their Weapons Ready for Use.

Of King Nicholas of Montenegro somebody writes that "he stops people to examine their guns and pistols and rates anybody who carries them unloaded"—which recalls an anecdote related of himself by Count Moltke, when, in 1856, he accompanied the crown prince of Prussia to Moscow to attend the coronation of Alexander II. At a ball in the kremlin Moltke was introduced to a group of picturesque potentates from central Asia, with their girdles stuck full of daggers and pistols in the Albanian manner, and he begged to know whether these firearms of theirs were loaded. "Why should I carry them if they were not loaded?" replied the spokesman of the party; and in a letter to his English wife Moltke confessed that he had never experienced such a setback in all his life. "Here at last," he said, "I have found 'un homme serieux,'" a man who is what he looks and means what he says.

Virtue in the Lawn Mower.

So many little jests are cast at the lawn mower and the man who propels it that our eyes may become blinded to its very real virtues. These virtues do not lie so much in the primly clipped lawns, which, of course, are very nice and attractive, but in the effect a lawn mower has on its conductor, the man who runs it. A good lawn mower and a generous gift of bluegrass will do more for a man than a trip to the hills or the sea. They will harden his muscles, enlarge his lungs, reduce his fat and mellow his temper. Blessed is the lawn mower.—Sioux City Journal.

MRS. RAVENYELP HAD PROOFS

Act Seemed Somewhat Mean, but It Left Conjugal Partner Without a Word to Say.

Placing the family phonograph on the library table, Mrs. Ravenyelp said to her husband:

"I have an old record here, Henry, and I want to see if you can guess what it is."

When a weird succession of sounds began to come from the horn of the instrument, Ravenyelp knitted his brow and tried to identify them.

"It's a buzz saw plowing through a knot," he ventured.

"Guess again," said Mrs. Ravenyelp.

"A slide trombone in full cry."

"Hardly."

"Cat concert?"

"Nope."

"Hoot owl with his toes in a trap."

Smiling grimly, Mrs. Ravenyelp shook her head in the negative.

"Give it up," finally said Ravenyelp; "but as one last guess I'll say that it sounds very much like a siren whistle with the pip."

"I will agree that it is as bad as all you have named," Mrs. Ravenyelp remarked, "and I hope it will save a lot of argument in the future."

"But what is it?" insisted Ravenyelp.

"It's a record I made in your bedroom the other night," replied Mrs. Ravenyelp, "to prove to you that you really do snore in your sleep and to let you know just how awful it sounds."—Judge.

Small Talk.

Fuseli, the painter, had a great dislike to that species of conversation familiarly denominated "tattle." Once, when sitting in his room for a long while amongst some trifling visitors who were discussing the weather and such like interesting subjects, after remaining for a long time without speaking burst forth with a "We had pork for dinner today!" "Dear! Mr. Fuseli," exclaimed one, "what an odd remark!" "Why," replied he, "it's as good as anything you've been saying for the last hour."

Thinks He Has a Rubens.

Bought for 36 cents, a painting discovered in a small Australian town has been ascribed to Rubens, the Dutch artist, and valued at $100,000. The present owner is Dr. Summers of Perth, W. A., who bought the canvas, the other day, for $250 from the man who made the discovery and acquired the picture for 36 cents. Dr. Summers is about to leave for London, Eng., in order to submit the canvas to the president of the Royal academy and other art experts.

Long Drouth Broken.

The long continued drouth was broken yesterday with soaking rains, which will make late tobacco and corn, and perhaps revive the gardens and pasturage. Early tobacco was firing so that growers began cutting Monday in many sections; the bloom on the early corn had burned and the prospect in that quarter on the high lands is very discouraging, but we hope to see the late corn make a good yield.—Carrollton News.

The potato bugs have about cleaned up what little was left of the potato crop hereabout and are now roaming the streets.—Mt. Olivet Tribune-Democrat.

Here's The Plumb Bob

It's just another proof that Tubular Cream Separators are just up to the minute—miles ahead of anyother. No other machine has it.

What's It For?

It enables you to level the Sharples Dairy Tubular Cream Separator in a minute—quicker than you could find the spirit level you must use to level all other separators. A glance at the plumb bob, hanging there on the back of the Tubular, will always tell you whether the Tubular remains level. In that way you get the very best work out of the Tubular, for all Separators should be kept level to do their best work.

Tubulars have dozens of exclusive fine points and are sold on the level. Bring the wife in. See how simple, perfect and different from others Tubulars are.

JOHN MUIR'S STUDY MACHINE

Naturalist Tells of Wonderful Invention for Which He Has Not Yet Taken Out a Patent.

"Nevertheless I still indulged my love of mechanical invention," writes John Muir in his volume, "Story of My Boyhood and Youth." "I invented a desk in which the books I had to study were arranged in order at the beginning of each term. I also made a bed which put me on my feet every morning at the hour determined on, and in dark winter mornings just as the bed set me on the floor it lighted the lamp. Then, after the minutes allowed for dressing had elapsed, a clock was heard, and the first book to be studied was pushed up from a rack below the top of the desk, thrown open, and allowed to remain there the number of minutes required. Then the machinery closed the book and allowed it to drop back into its stall, then moved the rack forward and threw up the next in order, and so on, all the day being divided according to the times of recitation, and time required and allotted to each study.

"Besides this, I thought it would be a fine thing in the summer time, when the sun rose early, to dispense with the clock-controlled bed machinery, and make use of sunbeams instead. This I did simply by taking a lens out of my small spy glass, fixing it on a frame on the sill of my bedroom window, and pointing it to the sunrise; the sunbeams focussed on a thread, burned it through, allowing the bed machinery to put me on my feet.

"When I wished to arise at any given time after sunrise, I had only to turn the pivoted frame that held the lens the requisite number of degrees or minutes. Thus I took Emerson's advice and hitched my dumping wagon bed to a star."

POOR GIRAFFE LOVED TURTLE

Animal's Suicide in Jardin des Plantes Explained to Satisfaction of Commissary.

It is a sad, sad story and the details will never be known—how the giraffe at the Jardin des Plantes, the Paris zoo, committed suicide.

This giraffe, who held the record in her class for height, was neurasthenic. The attendants noticed the other day that she looked troubled. She stood in her front yard waving her long neck from side to side, her eyes in the clouds. Then she dashed her head against the side of her house, causing concussion of the brain.

The commissary of police was notified of her death and he opened an inquest. What were the reasons for suicide? She was of high standing, four and a half meters. She was not involved in the troubles of married life, for the simple reason that she was not married. Perhaps, however, she was in love.

When the commissary came to this question he felt sure he was on the right track. From the keepers he learned in fact that the giraffe some time previously had fallen in love with a turtle, but the latter showed almost stony indifference to her advances. She tried to make eyes at the turtle, but he seemingly paid no attention to her. The turtle seemed to think there was an inseparable distance between them. The inquest was ended and it only remained for the commissary to notify the family of the deceased.

Progressive Saskatchewan.

A traveler was asked by a fellow passenger who had just boarded the train at—well, call it Boosterville, Saskatchewan. "Well, what do you think of Boosterville?" The traveler gave his testimony, which was to the effect that he thought Boosterville was a real live town, a cute town, a town which meant to get there and which had a great future ahead of it, a town which had made remarkable progress during the short time it had been in existence. "When were you there?" inquired the man from Boosterville. "Bout three weeks back," the traveler replied. "Geel" cried the Boostervillian in astonishment that such implied ignorance could be, "Geel You oughter seen it this morning!"—Canadian News.

Peculiarity of Cast Iron.

Singularly enough, cast iron, never considered very strong, and thought by most people to be far less durable than steel, improves greatly in strength when subjected to constant shocks. This was proved by guns of various ages and service. Guns tried a month after casting burst at the seventieth or eightieth discharge. Other guns, which had been in use for six years, failed to burst after 2,000 or 3,000 discharges, and cast iron bars, after being subjected to shocks, frequently gain 100 per cent. in strength. But, in all cases, the cast iron which proved strongest was cast iron which had had "a holiday" in between the hard work.

Remarkable "Doubles."

The double has long been a favorite character of fiction and drama; "The Lyons Mail" immediately comes to mind. One encounters him constantly on the stage, in mystifications of the kind of which "The Great Lafayette" was a master. So close, indeed, was the resemblance between him and his professional double that after his death in a hotel fire in Glasgow it was for some time a matter of uncertainty whether it was his body or that of the other man which was found in the ruins. The matter is a curious one. It might be worth investigating more closely.

WHITE WAYS NOT WELCOMED

Explorer Tells of Dire Results of "Civilization" Among the Eskimos That He Has Known.

Cold figures and facts presented by Vilhajalmar Stefansson show why he wishes to protect his "blond Eskimos" from contact with the whites. He says in the Geographical Magazine that according to records in the 60 years up to 1910 the Mackenzie river Eskimos "have been civilized, Christianised and reduced by white men's diseases from over 2,000 to less than 40. In 1911 there were at Cape Bathurst about 40 civilized Eskimos, partly Mackenzie river people and partly emigrants, and out of that 40 a good 20 were seriously ill, two of them permanently insane, while in an uncivilized group (which from the very beginning has been isolated from white men) we found only one sick, an old man who had been blind for something like eight years.

"And not only were many of the civilized Mackenzie people chronically ill, but they were also insufficiently clothed and insufficiently fed. There was in 1911 probably not a single individual in the Prince Albert sound group who did not have at least two complete suits of warm skin clothing and many had several suits, while among the civilized Eskimos of the Mackenzie at any time between 1908 and 1912 a man who had even one good suit was hard to find. Most of them are so poorly clad that they are unable to hunt seal in winter through being insufficiently protected from the cold.

"This insufficiency of clothing is the result of two things: First, the introduction of rifles has destroyed the caribou upon which they depended for clothing, and, secondly, the multiplication of new wants, such as the desire for tea, tobacco, sugar and ammunition, forces them to barter for these expensive luxuries the skins which they might otherwise have used to dress in for the cold."

"TELEPHONE" FOR THE DEAF

Letters and Numbers to Be Flashed on Buttons by an Electric Keyboard, Is the Idea.

An optical telegraph intended to fill the place of the telephone for talking with a deaf person has recently been invented by a deaf and dumb married couple of Berlin, Germany. It consists essentially of a keyboard, as in a typewriter, through whose keys single electric currents pass. In each circuit is included an incandescent lamp with a flat surface, bearing a letter of the alphabet or a Roman numeral. Pressing any key causes the corresponding lamp to glow. Thus words and sentences are spelled out and numbers are formed.

The keyboard can be operated as fast as that of an ordinary typewriter, so that with practice communication becomes very smooth and rapid. Each station, of course, must contain both a sender and a receiver and these may be in different rooms or in houses a long distance apart.

The instrument can be conveniently used for conversation between a deaf person and a normal person who is ignorant of the finger language. The silence with which the device is operated is a very important point in its favor. This feature might make it especially useful where quiet or secrecy in transmitting information is desirable, as in sending war news or secret instructions in business houses.

Couldn't Break Off Cigarettes.

King George, as every one knows, is very fond of his cigarette. Once his majesty said to the Czar, when the august cousins were talking of the evils of excessive indulgence in "fags:" "Do you know that, when I was years younger, I got an idea that cigarettes were bad for me? I resolved to limit myself to five smokes a day.

"The first day I managed to exist upon the number determined. The second day I smoked all five before lunch, and felt miserable for the rest of the day. The third day I smoked the five judiciously, but still felt a great 'wanting.' On the fourth day I could stand it no longer, and so smoked fifteen 'fags' to make up for my self-denial."

"Wheel" Barometer.

What is known as the wheel barometer is an ingenious variation of Torricelli's idea. This barometer was invented by Robert Hooke, probably the greatest "philosophical mechanic" of his day. It is intended to indicate the weather without observing the mercury itself. There is the usual tube, but it is bent at the bottom into a short leg. In this leg a little glass float rests upon the surface of the mercury. A cord attached to the float passes over the pulley. The pulley is furnished with a pointer that moves around the dial, the moving agency being the rising or falling mercury, which lifts or lowers the float.

Old Theories About Lightning.

Our forefathers had many theories about lightning. According to them no one could be struck by lightning while asleep, and no tree struck by lightning could be burnt. Splinters from such a tree, diligently chewed, were an infallible cure for toothache, and were, of course, pleasanter to the taste than the dentists' forceps. And the old time schoolboy firmly believed that if he were rash enough to mention lightning directly after a flash, the important part of his raiment would be immediately torn off. And many were his attempts to land his fellows in that predicament.

RULING RACE MUCH WORRIED

Caste Question in India Threatens to Make Trouble for the Britishers in Control of Country.

The spirit of social justice has reached India, and, as a consequence, it is becoming difficult to distinguish genuine Vaisyas from their Sundra inferiors. Many Vaisyas castes, in their turn, are claiming to be Kshtris, and are openly wearing the sacred thread of the twice born. Among the latter, the tendency to assume a higher rank than one was born with manifests itself in the endeavor of the subcastes to break into the exclusiveness that surrounds the highest. "If this process continues," remarks the Calcutta Englishman, "a time must soon come when all the native inhabitants of India, excluding the Mohammedans, will pretend to Brahmin blood." It is difficult for a dweller in the new world to be greatly disturbed over this possibility, but one can understand the hard position of a western government which must be careful in conferring titles of office upon natives lest it upset agelong custom. What England does is to recognize differences of this sort by giving or withholding the style of "his highness," according to the circumstances of the case. Thus a ruling chief of Charcoli, if there were one, would be called "H. H. the Maharajah of Charcoli." A mere prominent citizen whom the government raised to power, however, would have to be content with some such designation as "Maharajah Bishen Sing Rawat, of Charcoli." But somehow this does not suffice, especially when the prominent citizen takes pains to sign himself "Maharajah of Charcoli," and his private secretary puts "H. H." before the signature.

WOULDN'T DO AS A WITNESS

Lawyer for the Defense Had No Use for a Writer of Fiction on His Side of the Case.

Irvin S. Cobb, short story writer, recently returned from a western trip to learn that a dear friend had been snared in a lawsuit. He hurried down to the friend's lawyer. "I want you to call me as a character witness," said he. "Why, Jack's the dearest, kindest, most honest white man in the world. I've got to go on the stand for that boy." "Not while I'm his lawyer," said the legal shark. "I know just what would happen. The other man's lawyer would ask you your occupation. And you'd say: 'I'm a writer of fiction.' And the lawyer would get up and stand over you and look into the dark recesses of your soul for a time. And by and by, despairing of finding one sweet, aspiring thought in you, he would turn to the jury. And he would exchange an intelligent, libelous smile with those 12 sturdy souls. And then he would go back to his chair, and without even troubling to look in your direction he would say: 'That is quite enough, Mr. Cobb. You may stand down.'"

Bananas in America.

When it is remembered that the United States now takes 60,000,000 bunches of bananas annually, and that the trade is growing steadily, it is difficult to realize that the banana was scarcely known in this country prior to 1870. About that time the captain of a vessel trading between Boston and South America called at Port Morant, Jamaica, for a consignment of bamboo. Having room in the hold for further cargo he decided to fill in with bananas, with which he and other seafarers to the tropics had long been familiar. His venture proved so profitable that the importing of bananas became a regular trade, which has grown steadily as the popularity of the banana has increased.

Good Word for the Bat.

The bat, as everyone knows, is hated, by women particularly, just a little less than the rat, and all men have their hands turned against him. Now the government has discovered that the nocturnal chiropter instead of being useless and worthless is really most valuable. He is the inveterate enemy of all insects that fly at night. Vernon Bailey of the Biological Survey of the department of agriculture, in recent investigations, found that bats shot in the evening after flying for 20 minutes are found with stomachs so gorged with mosquitoes, gnats and black flies that it was difficult to figure how they could eat any more.—Van Norden's Magazine.

Significant Change of Times.

Mr. Roosevelt's successful count of his glasses to win his libel action contrasts present customs with those of England eighty years ago. G. W. E. Russell recounts: "Mr. Gladstone, conspicuous from his Oxford days for his moderation in the use of wine, told me that until Sir Andrew Clark limited him on grounds of health to a certain number of glasses he had never thought of counting them. One drank what was put in one's glass without counting or questioning."

English Officials Nervous.

A young woman who was under arrest in a London police court the other day drew from her handbag a round box and aimed it at the judge. The police officers sprang forward and grabbed the box. As they did so toilet powder flew across the reporters' benches and covered the clothes of the men. But everybody in the room believed that his last hour had come, for the capers of the suffragettes caused them all to see a bomb in the harmless box.

THE FARMER'S CREDIT.

It is Based on the Fertility of His Soil, and He Should Raise Stock.

While a great deal has been said about farm loans, it has remained for a small circle of country bankers in the West to do something really practical. There is nothing startling in their idea, nor have they asked anyone else to put it in practice. It is simply their own method for financing a farmer up to his reasonable requirements.

The first thing is to improve the farmer's credit. These bankers are among the first to realize fully that a farmer's credit is in his soil. Therefore, fertility, not acres, is the basis of credit. They offer to advance funds at reasonable rates to stock farms with well bred cattle and hogs. One of these bankers was scheduled for a public address in Montana. His subject was "dairying," because as he said, it made the farmer a better risk for the banker, and improved the general credit of the community. Another said: "I would not refuse credit to an all-grain farmer, but I would extend his credit if he kept live stock."

There is reason for this. It is no more possible to raise crops without food than it is to raise a steer on air. Nature has stored the necessary salts in the earth for plant life, but every succeeding crop depletes the supply. The farmer who takes all and puts nothing back is like a railroad that pays out all its earnings for dividends, and applies nothing to maintenannce. When he hauls 100 bushels of wheat to market and burns the straw, he is taking approximately $38 worth of nitrogen, phosphorus and potassium from the stored up supply in his soil. A similar amount of corn, including the stalks, will take about $30 worth of these elements; while about $20 goes into the production of the same amount of oats.

Animal products take but a negligible net amount of these elements from the soil. That is why dairying makes the farmer a better risk for the banker. Pork production goes with dairying. When a dairyman has produced 1,000 pounds of pork he has taken only about $3.50 from his soil. When a man sells dairy products, beef, pork or mutton, he is selling his produce in the form of a highly finished product; while the greater part of the essential elements of fertility are returned to the land. But when he sells his crops themselves from the farm he is merely mining and selling fertility from his soil. Whatever is taken from a mine reduces its value.

No amount of Congressional legislation can change these facts. The farmer's basis of credit is in the fertility of his soil. The upbuilding of that fertility and consequently his own credit, rests upon less all-grain and more live stock farming.

A vast amount of ill health is due to impaired digestion. When the stomach fails to perform its functions properly the whole system becomes deranged. A few doses of Chamberlain's Tablets is all you need. They will strengthen your digestion, invigorate your liver, and regulate your bowels, entirely doing away with that miserable feeling due to faulty digestion. Try it. Many others have been permanently cured—why not you? For sale by J. W. Berkshire and Son and E. E. Kelly.

Former State Senator Frank Rives of Hopkinsville has served notice on Ira D. Smith that he would contest the nomination of the latter as Democratic candidate for County Atty. of Christian county. Rives and Smith were rival candidates and the official count showed a tie vote. To settle it coins were tossed and Smith won. Rives states that the contest is not brought in any spirit of malice, and no fraud or corruption is alleged.

Then why the recount?

W. A. Curtis planted a bushel of potatoes the past spring. They "came up" all right, the vines reaching a height of three feet. Last week Mrs. Curtis dug the patch and the yield consisted of fifteen small potatoes about the size of ordinary marbles.—Mt. Olivet Tribune-Democrat.

W. L. RIDDELL, Publisher.

In Kentucky it is out of one political campaign into another, the ring is not cleared of the hats of the defeated before another lot is cast therein. The masses in this county will hardly believe that there are now several candidates in the field in this county for the Democratic nomination for office to be bestowed four years hence, but nevertheless it is a fact, and it is said that some of the candidates in the last primary were fixing their fences for four years hence in the event they were defeated. This to the ordinary voter would seem untimely haste, and it is evident at this early date that the county primary four years hence will be a warm number.

But the voters of this county and judicial district will not have to wait four years before they will participate in what, in all probability, will be an interesting fight, and in which Boone county will have two entries while each of the other four counties Carroll, Grant, Gallatin and Owen counties will have one or more, as it is understood that Judge Cammack will not stand for a renomination and reelection as circuit judge.

So far the names of only four in two counties have been mentioned but it is understood that there are prospective candidates in each of the other three counties. Boone's entries will probably be County Judge P. E. Cason, of Burlington and Attorney Chas. Strother, of Walton. Judge Cason is being constantly solicited by leading Democrats from the other counties to make the race, which makes him look a very formidable candidate should he decide to enter the contest. Attorney Strother, while not long a citizen of this county, has made a very favorable impression with the people, and his friends claim that he has elements of strength in other parts of the district that would put him across in handsome style. Attys. Botts and Vallandingham, of Owenton, Owen county, are the other gentlemen who are being mentioned as candidates, so it is evident with the above array only in the field a battle royal would be waged from one end of the district to the other, and locality, which appears to favor Boone county, will cut a considerable figure in the fight, but the question is which of the two gentlemen, Cason or Strother will profit the most thereby?

Recent developments indicate that this country is very apt to have serious trouble with Mexico. President Wilson has been using his best endeavors to avoid a scrap with that country, but he has not been able to clear up the situation there in a peaceable manner. About the best way is to furnish the warring factions down there with all the munitions of war they desire and trust to the fittest surviving.

R. D. No. 3.

A much needed rain fell here Monday.

Manilus Goodridge and wife spent Sunday in Taylorsport.

Mrs. Robt. Fox, of Delhi, visited in this neighborhood last Friday.

Miss Fannie Hoshal, of Cincinnati, has been the guest of relatives here.

John Jacob has returned after a visit with relatives and friends in Indiana.

Roscoe Boatman, of near Sheldon, Ill., visited J. W. Brown and family last week.

The Utzinger reunion was well attended last Sunday at the home of Mrs. Helena Utzinger.

Thomas Eggleston and family spent Saturday night and Sunday with Luther Estes and family.

Chas. Beall had a horse to fall in the well last Friday. It was removed and was injured only slightly.

W. D. Helms and family, of near Guilford, Ind., spent the latter part of last week with relatives in this neighborhood. They were accompanied home by their little son, Raymond.

The citizens of Walton have cleaned and oiled their shooting irons, and the next burglar that visits that town will be given a warm reception, and would better be attired in a bullet proof suit if he wants to escape being shot to pieces.

The Erlanger fair had a splendid day with which to make its start, and with favorable weather the remainder of the week the attendance will be large.

Mrs. Geo. F. Piper and two daughters have returned to their home in Birmingham, Ala., after a visit of several weeks here with their relatives.

A toll gate has been located on the Covington and Lexington pike near the Boone and Kenton county line between Florence and Erlanger.

Lost—A bunch of 10 or 12 keys. The finder will receive a reward of $1 by returning them to B. B. Hume, Burlington.

In many counties in Kentucky the drouth situation has been relieved by fine rains during the last week.

The citizens of Union will be liberal patrons of the Erlanger fair this week and the Florence fair next week.

Petersburg people are rejoicing because of the erection of a handsome Odd-Fellows building there.

Florence is busy getting ready to accommodate a big crowd of visitors during the fair next week.

Watch Hubert Gaines' yearling horse colt clean up at Erlanger, this week.

The citizens of Belleview are enjoying their annual melon feast.

Working on the Right Line.

The Hopkins county Commercial Club, recently organized, has taken the initial steps toward securing a farm demonstration agent to promulgate better agricultural methods among the farmers of that county.

In initiating this movement the club is living up to its name and is showing a proper conception of its duty to the farmer as a factor for the common prosperity. All commercial organizations are not working on so broad a platform, but there can be no doubt that rural progress is necessary to permanent urban progress, and that the interests of all classes are best conserved when the town and the country are prosperous and harmonious.

Hopkins county is best known to the outside world for its coal mines; but it has varied resources and it stands well up on the list of Kentucky counties in the value of its agricultural products. It has hundreds of good farms whereon is grown a great variety of field, garden and orchard crops. It has its quota of progressive farmers, but as in most other counties, they are outnumbered by the non-progressive element. Its farmers, the majority of them at least, need to learn more about scientific farming and about modern ways of planting, cultivating, harvesting and marketing their products. It is the mission of the farm demonstrators to teach these things, and the Hopkins county Commercial Club cannot better employ its activities than in promoting the country's agricultural interests in this way.

A number of counties of Kentucky have secured the services of these agents and are finding that they have made a good investment. Next year, when the Federal Government's allowance to Kentucky is expected to be larger, there should be agents in many other counties where they are not now employed.—C.-J.

A portion of the drouth stricken district in Missouri and Kansas has been visited by copious rains, relieving the situation considerably, but the crop of corn has been materially injured in both of those States.

A Kentucky feudist died with his boots off at Winchester, Clark county, last Monday. It was Bob Profit, one of the French-Eversole gang that Made the mountains of Kentucky famous, several years ago, as a feud district.

Harry K. Thaw's escape from asylum in which he has been confined so long, is in the matter of interest, rivaling the Mexican situation.

For Sale—My property in Florence, consisting of a five room brick house, one acre of land, good cellar, barn and other outbuildings. Price reasonable if sold before September 1st.

Crop Report for Kentucky.

The crop report as of August 1st shows the general crop condition to be the worst that has been known in Kentucky for many years owing to the lack of moisture. The western part of the State has suffered most and the eastern the least from the long continued drouth. Practically every report coming to this office contains a statement in regard to the lack of rain fall. There has been practically no rain fall since August 1st in the State when the crop reports were received and hence conditions are getting worse instead of better.

Corn has dropped to a condition of 63.6 per cent for the entire State, many sections reporting less than one-half of the usual crop possibility. Owing to an error, the tobacco crop report is not complete, but from the few reporting on this crop, a condition of 80 per cent dark tobacco and 65 for Burley tobacco is indicated.

Condition of livestock has decreased owing to a shortage of pasture. Lack of stock water is driving many animals to the market.

The final yield of wheat is given as 12.5 bushels per acre for the State as against 9.3 bushels last year. Oats at 18.3 bushels, barley at 17.8 bushels, rye 10.9 bushels.

An interesting part of this crop report is the estimate of one hundred farmers of the cost of producing an acre of wheat in Kentucky. Out of one hundred estimates from various portions of the State and with land values and price of labor etc., varying, the average estimate of the cost of producing an acre of wheat is $10.16. With the average of wheat for the State 12¼ bushels per acre and sold at 90 cents, it leaves the farmers of Kentucky making a profit of 91 cents per acre on their wheat for 1913.

For Sale—Good pulg horse. Apply to James Strouse on Florence pike near Burlington.

The picnic at the Harvest Home grounds last Saturday afternoon was a very pleasant affair, and enjoyed by many young people who delight in congregating at that popular outing point.

Local Happenings.

All roads lead to the Erlanger fair this week.

The Boone County Teachers Institute is close at hand again.

Earl Smith is out again after an illness of two weeks or ten days.

The good roads fever seems to be spreading in this county, which by the way is a good disease to have.

The showers the past week being merely local cooled the atmosphere for only a few hours at a time.

Fred Pfalzgraf, of Idlewild, delivered to J. F. Blyth, last Monday, a fine, new vehicle made by the Columbus Buggy Company.

Clifford Hedges attracts the attention of all as he goes over the road with that new buggy and harness and handsome horse he now drives.

A fair sized crowd attended the sale of personal property of W. L. Pope, deceased, last Monday afternoon, and prices generally were good. Milch cows brought as high as $72 a head.

Messrs. Mulchus Souther, Keene Souther, John Cloud and Leslie Harrison, of Hebron, and W. C. Watts, of Bullittsville, enrolled to take the civil service examination at Covington the past week.

We believe the rottenness of the primary in Todd has been greatly exaggerated. We are satisfied not over $12,000 was spent and the whisky consumed would not exceed 500 gallons.—Todd Co. Times.

The Falmouth Fair has space in the advertising columns this week. It is one of the best fairs in this part of the State, it draws large crowds and gives its patrons the worth of their money. If you want to enjoy yourself attend that fair.

The Federal Government has passed favorably on the appropriation of $37,000 to rebuild the pike from Maysville to Mt. Sterling, and it will be one of the finest thoroughfares in the state and possibly, in the U. S. considering the distance.

"Pepper" Smith, of Belleview, who handles a large quantity of tobacco every year, says that the growing crop in this county is a better crop than that of last year was at this time. Mr. Smith watches the crop closely and is good authority on the subject.

At the meeting of Burlington Masonic Lodge last Saturday night the entered apprentice degree was conferred on Charles Riley and Earl Cropper and the Fellow Craft degree on Raymond Cropper. Brethren were present from Hebron, Big Bone and Belleview lodges.

One of the most common ailments that hard working people are afflicted with is lame back. Apply Chamberlain's Liniment twice a day and massage the parts thoroughly at each application and you will get quick relief. For sale by J. W. Berkshire & Son and E. E. Kelly.

The crops in several neighborhoods in the county have been materially benefitted by local showers the past week, while yet in other neighborhoods in the county the drouth has been uninterupted. Where the tobacco got rain there has been a great change in the crop for the better.

Sheriff B. F. Hume spent two or three days the past week trying to capture the parties who had pulled off several burglaries in Walton and vicinity but was not successful. He arrested three or four negroes on suspicion but no evidence of their having participated in the robberies was obtained.

Dr. M. J. Crouch, of Union, and president of the Consolidated Telephone Company, was in Burlington last Monday, looking after the company's interest in this part of the county. He came in from Mr. G. W. Gaines', of Bullittsville, which neighborhood he said did not receive any rain last Saturday nor Sunday.

There were 150 applicants for civil service examination when the board of examiners began its session in Covington last week. It has been a long time since Democrats felt encouraged to take the examination, hence the rush and desire on their part for the federal pie that is to be distributed in the next few years.

State Game Warden, A. C. Scott, was in Burlington during court last week, looking up violations of the hunting and fishing law—namely seining and hunting. Mr. Scott says there will be some warrants issued for some violators soon. Hunting without license, penalty $50 to $200; seining $25 to $50.

The drouth in Oldham and adjoining counties has now reached a stage where much suffering will follow if relief does not come soon. Springs, wells, and streams are going dry, and water in many sections has to be hauled for stock. Here in LaGrange many cisterns are getting low. The electric light plant has not enough water to run full time, and has to be closed down early.—Oldham Era.

BIG LOSS.

W. C. Weaver's Barn and Contents Destroyed by Fire---Loss About $1,500.

A barn 38x41 feet, belonging to W. C. Weaver, who resides down on Gunpowder creek, was destroyed by fire last Saturday night. In the barn were three calves ready to vean, farm wagon, buggy, a complete set of farm implements and 25 tons of hay, all of which was lost. Mr. Weaver estimates his loss at $1,500 and has $600 insurance on the building.

It was about ten o'clock when Mrs. Weaver awoke and noticed there was an unusual light in the room. She called Mr. Weaver who went to the door and discovered the barn was a mass of flames. The farm bell was wrung vigorously by Mrs. Weaver and in a short time a large number of neighbors had arrived, but the fire had attained such proportions that nothing could be done, and their attention was turned to the protection of the other buildings that were in peril, and which they succeeded in saving. The barn was about 100 yards north of the residence and the wind blowing from the south, no doubt, saved the residence.

Several small buildings, such as hog houses were destroyed.

Mr. Weaver was at the barn a while before dark and as he does not smoke nor carry matches, and his son, Lloyd and wife not being at home, he can not account for the fire in any other way than that someone applied the torch.

Mrs. Weaver has a very badly cut hand resulting from an incision by a wire attached to the farm bell which she was wringing.

Mr. Weaver is making arrangements to erect another barn as soon as possible. The building was insured in the Boone county company.

Personal Mention.

Garnett Tolin is visiting friends at Tyrone, Anderson county.

Miss Sallie Rogers spent the past week with friends in Newark, Ohio.

Mrs. N. W. Carpenter is visiting her sister, Mrs. Cecil Gaines, of Erlanger.

W. C. Johnson, of Beaver, was the guest of his son, Samuel, last Sunday and Monday.

M. L. Riddell visited his brother, W. T. Riddell and wife, in Dayton, Ohio, several days the past week.

William Duncan, of Cincinnati, was a Sunday guest of his parents, Dr. and Mrs. E. W. Duncan.

C. C. Roberts, Thomas Rice and Omer Litt took the civil service examination held in Covington the past week.

Mrs. W. C. Delph, residing about two miles southeast of town, and who has been very ill, is improving nicely.

Messrs. Harvy and Lloyd McClasson, of the north end of the county, were callers at this office last Monday.

Miss Irba, oldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Tanner, out on the Florence pike, is threatened with typhoid fever.

Calvert Kirkpatrick and his daughter, Miss Myrtle, of Bromley, were Sunday guests of his relatives in Burlington.

Elmo Gaines, clerk in Auditor Bosworth's office in Frankfort, came home last week to spend a few days with his relatives.

Mrs. D. M. Snyder spent the past week with her son, Grover Snyder and wife, at Butler, Ky. Mrs. Snyder has been quite ill.

James Gaines and wife, of Flickertown neighborhood, were Sunday guests of his brother, Atty Sidney Gaines and wife, last Sunday.

Mrs. Cari Price and children, of Georgetown, and Mrs. T. H. Baker, of Louisville, are visiting Mr. and Mrs. M. E. Hance of Big Bone Springs.

Benj. Crisler, of McVille, was a business visitor to Burlington, last Tuesday. Owing to the drouth he is very much discouraged over crop conditions.

Master Milton Revill, of Frankfort, who spent his vacation here with his grandparents, has gone home to be ready to enter school when the fall term opens.

Miss Ruth Kelly, who was visiting her sister at Lebanon, Ohio, has returned home, and appears to have been very much benefitted by her sojourn at Lebanon.

F. P. Walton, of Covington, spent Saturday night and Sunday with his wife, who has been visiting her brothers and sister in Burlington for the past two weeks.

Mrs. Lottie Davrainville and Mrs. Kate Ashburn, after a week's visit with their sister, Mrs. F. A. Hall, left, Sunday, for Hathaway neighborhood, to visit relatives and friends for several days.

Lloyd McGlasson, of Taylorsport neighborhood; Lee Masters, of Bullittsville, and Benj. Crisler, of Petersburg, left last Tuesday, for Hot Springs, Arkansas, to be treated for rheumatism, of which disease Mr. McGlasson has been a great sufferer for a year or more.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Cowen, of Memphis, Tennessee, arrived last Saturday to visit Mr. Cowen's relatives in Burlington, Mr. R. S. Cowen and Mrs. Laura Martin and Miss Pinkie Cowen. Mr. Cowen has been in Memphis many years, where he holds a good position with the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company. He has not visited his old home since 1905, and his friends were surprised to see such a robust individual. Socially, he is the same, jolly, companionable gentleman of yore.

WEANING A COLT.

The Operation is Important Enough to Receive Careful Attention.

In many cases colts will wean themselves, but should they not, it is very important that they be weaned not later than five or six months of age. An abrupt separation of the dam and foal, until the former has ceased to secrete milk and the latter to look for it, is irrational and harmful to both. This method is commonly practiced, however. Some farmers erroneously believe that the time is of more value in other directions, and that any special arrangements for the comfort of the colts would have little if any beneficial results.

Colts should be taught to eat oats, preferably chopped or crushed, as soon as they can be induced to do so, thus affording a gradual separation for the time when their mother's source of food is cut short, otherwise they will falter and grow thin in flesh. Experience has taught that sudden changes of diet and usage have an ill effect on the condition of any class of stock, endangering the digestive organs of the young and frequently causing troubles of the mammary glands in the dam. As the colts have been dependent on their mothers for their principal means of sustenance, and milk being their natural food, they cannot avoid failing in condition to a certain extent when suddenly deprived of the same. Colts consequently fret more or less and this also aids in a degree to increase the trouble.

The future usefulness of the colt depends considerably on the condition in which the youngster is kept during the first year of its existence, and hence the exercise of good judgment in its management is called for. During the weaning process the condition of the mare should be looked after. If the mammary glands of the dam are still active, which they will be if she is a good milk producer, she is apt to suffer from inflammation of the glands. This, however, may be relieved if she is milked by hand for a few days which, of course, incurs a waste of milk at a time when the fluid would be of much benefit to the colt.

When it is decided to wean the colt it should be provided with a comfortable roomy box stall, away from other colts. It is of the utmost importance, of course, that care be taken as far as possible to prevent any injury from jumping and rolling while confined to the stall. For this reason it is necessary that the doors and walls be of good height and that there should be no mangers or boxes left in the stall. The youngster should be supplied with all the good clover hay it will eat, being allowed to feed off the ground. A liberal supply of chopped oats should form a part of the ration, and may be made more palatable and digestible by pouring boiling water over them and allowing them to stand in a closed vessel a few hours before feeding. Mixing a handful of linseed meal with the oats three or four times a week is good practice. Of course, the colt must have plenty of good, fresh water, and if carrots are at hand one or two given at noon will be greatly relished by the youngster.

That the weaning process may be accomplished with the minimum of discomfort, the operation should be commenced gradually. The dam should be taken to the colt three times daily and left for about twelve minutes each time during the first week. Twice daily will be sufficent during the second week, and once daily during the third week. This should be continued as long as any considerable quantity of milk is secreted, after which the colt will generally cease to look for the dam and may be turned into a yard or paddock every day for exercise. While such a method entails some time and attention it has the advantage of preserving the colt in a thrifty condition which more than pays for the little extra trouble.

The youngster should also be halterbroke while being weaned, which can be done by first having a small halter made and putting it on the colt, leaving it on all the time; not, however, attempting to lead the animal at once, but each time it is fed it can be led around some, which will teach it to lead and give it exercise at the same time. By doing this it will obviate the trouble usually experienced in halter breaking the young animals when not thus handled until later in life.—Indiana Farmer.

W. L. Kirkpatrick, Democrat, of Burlington, and A. R. Edwards, Republican, of Walton, have been appointed election commissioners for this county. Mr. Edwards is a reappointee.

A letter received at this office from T. W. J. Ryle says he has moved back to Petaluma, Cala., where he and Chester Quick are engaged in the poultry business. They have about 1,800 layers and 900 pullets, and eggs are worth 33c a dozen.

Some of the communications received at this office are so dim as to be almost illegible. A hard lead pencil used on soft paper does not produce copy with which the typo fails in love. Please write communications as plain as you can and the typo will keep in much better humor.

Selmar Wachs, a member of the recent firm of Roifes & Wach, Covington clothiers, is now sole proprietor of the business, having bought out his partner, Mr. Roifes, and taken possession of the business on the 12th inst. The old firm had a good trade in this county and Mr. Wachs will do all in his power to continue to merit the same.

TO CHANGE COURSE OF RHINE

German Idea Is to Have Great River Find the Sea Through the Fatherland.

That their great river should at last dribble to the sea through a number of mouths in foreign territory has long been a cause of sentimental regret to the German people. A society has now been formed at Coblentz to correct this mistake of nature.

Prof. Hans Busz of Munster has just published a book to help on the objects of the new society. He urges that the Rhine, instead of flowing as it does, northwest through the Netherlands, ought to flow from Duisburg, in Rhenish Prussia, northwest of Emden, the most westerly port of the German empire. The distance would be about 150 miles, and no locks would be needed.

The professor wants a canal of first rate proportions, comparable to those of Suez or Panama, and seeks to show that such a waterway would capture the traffic which now goes to Rotterdam and the Maas, and that in a few years Emden would become a world port. Professor Busz estimates that the "New Rhine" would cost $187,500,000, a large sum; but, he points out, only three-quarters of the extra $250,000,000 is to be spent on the army under the new law. He calculated that the gross takings during the first years would not be more than $5,000,000.

A year ago the Prussian minister of public works announced that the government regarded the project favorably, and had it under consideration. The new society starts under favorable auspices.

MAY BE SHIP LOST IN 1840

Finding of Wreck Evidently in Water Many Years Believed to Be Solution of Ocean Mystery.

An unknown wreck, which may prove the solution to the mystery of a ship which disappeared in 1840, has just be described at Westernport, Victoria, Australia. Diving operations were being conducted with the object of raising a sunken barge, and while the "sweep" was being dragged along the bottom of the channel it fouled an obstruction and remained fast. A diver was lowered beneath the waters, and found that the apparatus had become entangled in the hull of an old wreck, and further investigation showed that this vessel evidently had foundered many years ago, for it was thickly covered with marine growth. The sunken ship was constructed of English oak, the timbers visible being approximately 12 inches by 8 inches thick. Residents in the neighborhood told that several skeletons had been discovered in the sand opposite the wreck, and expressed the opinion that in all likelihood they were those of persons who were washed ashore. No reference to the wreck has been discovered in the department records, but it has been recalled that a weather bound vessel was reported at Westernpoint in 1840 and never seen since.

Writers of Historic Songs.

Most of the songs that have made history were written by men who had no other claim to immortality. The "Marseillaise" is the only production of Rouget de Liele which has survived, and "The Wearing of the Green" was the work of an anonymous purveyor of ballads for the street hawkers of Dublin. Max Schneckenburger, an obscure Swabian merchant, who never published anything else, composed in 1840 some verses of which the burden was thus translated:

"Dear Fatherland, no danger thine.
Firm stand thy sons to watch the Rhine."

Little was heard of these until 30 years later, when the Franco-German war gave them an enormous vogue. They were then adopted as the national anthem of United Germany, and a yearly pension of 3,000 marks was conferred on the composer of the tune to which they were set.

Put Socialism Above Life.

His wife's opposition to socialism, of which he was a strong advocate and one of the leaders in this city, is believed to have been the cause of James M. Bronson, a barber, hanging himself in his barber shop and poolroom.

Bronson's plans for killing himself were deliberate. He first drove an iron hook into a ceiling joist, then attached a stout rope, stood on the edge of one of the pool tables, and jumped off.

The man had gone to his shop early and pulled down the window shades to screen the interior from the street. Peter Moses, a grocer, became suspicious later in the morning when the shop was not opened, and peering through the window saw the body hanging from the ceiling.—Wilmington (Del.) Dispatch to the Philadelphia Record.

Animals Warn of Earthquaker.

One of the mysteries still unsolved is that of the sense by which the lower animals become aware of the approach of earthquakes at Guadalajara, Mexico, the many parrots of the city showed great and unusual restlessness, and during the period of disturbance the increased cries of the birds gave warning of the nearness of the worst shocks. Rats, also, became alarmed, fleeing from the city before the earthquakes came.

Supersensitiveness to faint shocks hardly gives satisfactory explanation, for modern seismographs are very sensitive, and it is quite unlikely that tremors too slight to be recorded would be felt so strongly as to give alarm.

GOOD ROADS.

[M. J. Crouch]

The world moves and we must move with it or become a derelict in space. Evolution is the unchangeable law of the universe—its antithesis is death. Science, the history of our civilization, tells us these things and proves them, too.

The belief in the inevitable onward march of everything toward a goal higher and better, purer and nobler, is the foundation on which we must stand, where we must place our feet if we are to stand erect like the intelligent beings we should be to view correctly the present and to look confidently into the future.

Those among us who have reached a score or more of years can not fail to notice many changes. The farmer has seen the sickle, the only means of reaping his golden grain, give way to the cradle, the cradle to the reaper with all its up-to-date improvements. He has heard his conservative neighbor decham ed in all good faith against the reaper as an extravagant innovation that would bankrupt the farmers of the country. As usual he proved to have been a very poor prophet, for it did not. On the contrary this same reaper marked an epoch in the cultivation of this great ceral. So the old implements and methods of farming have given way to better. What had been considered an extravagant innovation and be wailed as a calamity by one generation has been hailed as a necessity by the next. This is true of the farming industry and is equally true all along the line. Many wonderful inventions have enabled our manufacturers to place within the reach, by reducing the cost of production or making, of the poor man as well as the rich, thousands of comforts, necessities and many luxuries. Again, a few years ago we had no such things as a telephone. Then we heard as we thought idle gossip of the papers about Bell and a certain Frenchman having discovered that electricty on a wire would carry the waves of the voice and invented a way to reproduce these waves at a distance. All this has been proven and many more things even more wonderful as the wireless telephone and the wireless telegraph. Today there are few homes in this county where they have no telephones or even in the United States. We lead the world in the use of the telephone. We can send the human voice three thousand miles by wire and catch the interrupted currents of the wireless across the Atlantic ocean. These things excite our wonder and arouse our admiration, but they have already ceased to be innovations. They have become necessary parts of our modern complex civilization. This, too, in spite of the old moss back conservative who thought he recognized the voice of his good wife, Maria, when he used the telephone for the first time, and it happened to be struck by a bolt of lightening. our railroads has, perhaps, had our railroads has, perhaps, had more to do with the rapid development and progress of our nation at large than any other factor. From a single engine and a few miles of road bed with its iron rails developed with leaps and bounds until these iron rails cross and recross and checker the entire continent. The cost of the transportation facilities of this country amount to several billion of dollars and the freight paid these same railroads for hauling our corn, wheat, oats, hay, livestock and manufactured goods to market, and the coal from the mines to keep us warm in winter and to keep our factories going, amounts to vast sums annually more millions.

Yet, we could not get along and modern civilization could not exist without these same transportation facilities, without our easy and rapid communication by these railroads, steam ships, tele phones and telegraphs. Again, lest you forget, we must remind you that none of these great achievements could be operated without electricty—the universal motor power of the world, and the great herald of progress and a part of every refinement of civil life. In fact the entire history of the human race could be divided into three periods or ages—marking our progress from the original simplicity of savage life to our present condition or development—the age of stone, the age of iron and the age of electricty. Each age is named after the predominating material in use by the people of that day. It is a long way, indeed, from the prehistoric man of the stone age to the man of today. His needs were different and his conditions were different. Who can deny that he has made progress toward a higher goal or that he is not a better man from this very progress. Accordingly, if he has developed or made progress in the past he can and is developing or progressing today.

While visiting the World's Fair in Chicago, I was profoundly impressed by the words over the Transportation Building, "There be three things that mark the progress of a great nation—rapid transportation easy communication and good roads." No truer words were ever written. It is the recognized motto of the Gospel of Progress, while these things mark the progress of a nation, back of that progress must be the intelligent minds of the masses of its citizenship demanding these things. It would seem that the characteristic conservation of the good people of Boone county has prevented our keeping step in this general onward march of progress. Our natural resources are great—located in the bend of the Ohio river within only a few miles of Cincinnati and her sister cities with a combined population of more than seven hundred thousand people, a great manufacturing and varied business center with railroads, traction roads and good pikes going out in every direction north of the Ohio river. On the Kentucky side, however, we have only two steam roads and not one traction road. It is true we have the old Lexington pike coming this way and tourhing our eastern border, which Kenton Co. has made free along with all her other roads, thus doing her part towards her citizens and our citizens in making this approach to this great market a free boulevard to all. In doing this she challenges our admiration, takes a long step forward and makes a sound investment. What is a good investment for Kenton county and every county save one other in the State of Kentucky, must be a good investment for Boone county. What these people have done we can do. What is good for them and their children, their posterity, is not too good for us—our children and our posterity.

Shall we not say that back of this proposition is the demand of the mass of the intelligent citizenship of Boone county.

Don't overload your horses.

Don't feed too much corn in hot weather.

Don't make any sudden change in the feed.

Don't keep your horses in poorly ventilated stables.

Don't feed grain to warm horses. Give them hay first.

Don't allow the harness, especially the collar, to chafe.

Don't neglect to give the harness a cleaning once in a while.

Don't expect your horses to relish their feed, unless the mangers are clean.

Don't give large amounts of water at one time. Small amounts frequently are much better.

Don't give your horses patent medicine that you know nothing about, especially colic remedies.

Don't keep a horse going after it begins to show signs of exhaustion. You will save time by resting a bit.

Don't allow your horse to drink a large amount of water on coming into the stable very warm. Allowing them to cool off a bit first.

Don't allow your horses to wear a set of shoes more than a month. Have them removed, the hoofs heveled, and the shoes reset if they are worth it.—H. Preston Hoskins, University of Minnesota.

NOW HER FRIENDS HARDLY KNOW HER

But This Does Not Bother Mrs. Burton, Under the Circumstances.

Houston, Texas.—In an interesting letter from this city, Mrs. S. C. Burton writes as follows: "I think it is my duty to tell you what your medicine, Cardui, the woman's tonic, has done for me.

I was down sick with womanly trouble, and my mother advised several different treatments, but they didn't seem to do me any good. I lingered along for three or four months, and for three weeks, I was in bed, so sick I couldn't bear for any one to walk across the floor.

My husband advised me to try Cardui, the woman's tonic. I have taken two bottles of Cardui, am feeling fine, gained 15 pounds and do all of my housework. Friends hardly know me, I am so well."

If you suffer from any of the ailments so common to women, don't allow the trouble to become chronic. Begin taking Cardui to-day. It is purely vegetable, its ingredients acting in a gentle, natural way on the weakened womanly constitution. You run no risk in trying Cardui. It has been helping weak women back to health and strength for more than 50 years. It will help you. At all dealers.

A treat for our readers that we have arranged for is a series of twelve illustrated articles on

The Panama Canal

and the

Isthmus in History and Romance

By Edward W. Pickard

Mr. Pickard is that type of globe-trotting author who seeks the quaint and curious places and people as subjects for his clever descriptive articles. In his present series of twelve articles which we have arranged to print, he has touched not only the actual work of building the canal, and the people who have accomplished it, but has gone into what the newspaper worker knows as the side lines, and which as a rule are of as much interest as the main story. This is particularly true in this case. After our readers have completed the last of Mr. Pickard's articles they will have a better understanding of the Panama Canal, and conditions within and surrounding the canal zone.

It is said that liquor improves with age. That may account for the fact that the older some men get, the better they like it.

TABOGA ISLAND AND PORTO BELLO

BY E. W. PICKARD

PHOTOS BY WESTERN NEWSPAPER UNION

1—Remains of One of the Spanish Forts at Porto Bello. 2—Native Village on Taboga Island.

"Down verdure-clad slopes and terracing reaches
Where orange and mango and pine-apple grow,
One wanders through Eden to ocean-washed beaches—
An Eden that only the sun-children know."

Thus James S. Gilbert, the late lamented poet of Panama, wrote of Taboga Island. It was so enticing that I determined to be one of the sun-children for a day or two and so steamed away in a little launch twelve miles out into the Pacific to that beauty spot. It is all that Mr. Gilbert called it, and more, and it is no wonder that the sanitarium, established there by the French canal company and reopened by the Americans, is so well patronized. If you are a canal employe—white—and have been ill, the doctor may be kind enough to send you over to Taboga for two weeks to recuperate. If you are a mere visitor you can put up at the unpretentious little hotel conducted by William Jones, the American six-footer who looks like a miner and dances like a cotillon leader. In either case you will be fortunate, for you will find those "verdure-clad slopes" gorgeous with flowers and alive with brilliant birds, and the "ocean-washed beaches," the finest places in the world for a swim. You can sail about the pretty bays with the native fishermen, or you can climb up the hills where the boys are vociferously driving the kine home to be milked, or you can merely lie in the shade and dream dreams of the Spanish galleons and the buccaneers. A more delightful place for rest and the repair of shattered nerves would be hard to find.

Taboga has a history, too, small as it is. De Luque, the second bishop of Panama, looked upon the island, saw that it was good and established there his country residence. In fact he maintained a household there the year round, for, like many another churchman of the old days, he did not adhere closely to the rule of celibacy. His memory is preserved by a bathing place in a stream that runs down the mountain side, called the Bishop's Pool. It was reserved for the use of him and his retinue. Above it is the Family Pool, for women and children, and still higher up is the Pool of the Letters, for the men. The last one derives its name from the inscription "J. F. B., Ohio" carved on a near-by rock. This is a reminder that in 1852 the Fourth infantry, U. S. A., crossed the isthmus en route for garrison duty in California, having sailed from New York on the United States mail steamer Ohio. Cholera was prevalent at the time in Panama and the American soldiers and the sailors from the Ohio were attacked by the disease, about eighty of them dying. Some of the sick were left on Taboga island to recover, and evidently one of them did recover sufficiently to climb up to the bathing pool and leave the record that is a mystery to the native inhabitants of this day. Incidentally U. S. Grant, then a captain, was with the Fourth infantry on that trip.

If you climb up the hill, following this stream most of the way, you will come to a place at the summit of a pass called Las Cruces. There, set in cement, are three small crosses commemorating the most exciting incident in the island's history. According to a Spanish work written early in the last century, a shipload of Peruvian pirates came sailing up the coast in 1515 and decided Taboga was a good place to loot. They landed and drove the small Spanish garrison out of the village and up the mountain. But in the pass the soldiers rallied, the inhabitants came to their assistance and there, says the chronicler, a most bloody combat raged for hours. Finally the pirates were routed and fled to their ship, leaving three men dead on the field of battle!

The isthmus reeks with history, some of the most interesting passages of which have to do with Porto Bello. But the visitor who goes there with mind full of the mighty fights and great trade of the old Spanish days will be woefully disappointed by the town as it now is. Romance, commerce, everything attractive has fled long ago from that place and Porto Bello is nothing but a dirty, immoral little village, full of low cantinas, shiftless natives and mangy curs. At each side of the town is the ruin of a Spanish fort, its picturesqueness marred by fishermen's nets and the local washing hung up to dry.

Thus the work of man has decayed, but Nature is as kind as ever to Porto Bello. Its bottle-shaped harbor is one of the prettiest to be found, with promontories guarding the entrance, beautiful hills on both sides and entrancing little rivers meandering down from the mountains and through the jungle into its upper end. One hill opposite the town boasts the remains of three unusually interesting Spanish forts. One is at the water's edge, another several hundred yards up the slope, and these two were once connected by a covered stone stairway the ruins of which still provide the easiest means of ascending. On the summit of the hill is the third fort, a mighty square tower surrounded by a deep moat. The walls are almost intact but the roof has fallen in and the fortress is full of trees and shrubbery.

With these three forts, two others protecting the harbor entrance, the two at the ends of the town and another just above it, Porto Bello might well seem to have been impregnable, yet it was taken twice by the English. Sir Francis Drake planned to capture it in 1596, but just as his ships were about to begin the attack Drake died and was buried in the mouth of the harbor. Dispirited by the loss of their leader, the English sailed away, but Capt. William Parker took up the project in 1602. With two ships he got past the first forts at night and after a desperate fight captured and sacked the city, carrying off 10,000 ducts' worth of plunder.

The second taking of Porto Bello was the first notable exploit of Henry Morgan, the famous buccaneer, as an independent commander of a fleet. Sailing into what is now Colon harbor, he took his men up a river in canoes, landed at a place called Estera Longa Lemos and marching through the jungle, attacked the city from the rear. First capturing the castle above the town, he shut the garrison in one room and blew them and the fort to pieces with gunpowder. The governor, the citizens and the rest of the soldiers, surprised and terror-stricken, were soon driven into one of the other forts and for hours they bravely withstood the assaults of the buccaneers until, as Esquemeling tells us, Captain Morgan began to despair of the whole success of the enterprise. Finally he had a number of ladders made and forced the priests and nuns whom he had captured to set them up against the walls. Many of these poor creatures were killed by the defenders, but at last the ladders were placed and the buccaneers swarmed up them carrying fireballs and pots of powder which they kindled and hurled among the Spaniards. The garrison surrendered at discretion, but the gallant governor defended himself so obstinately that the English were forced to kill him. Morgan remained in Porto Bello several weeks, plundering the place and torturing the citizens to induce them to reveal the hiding places of their riches.

Though an important place in the transshipment of gold from the west coast of South America, Porto Bello never was a large town, but for several weeks each year it was very populous. This was at the time of the annual fair, when the galleons from Spain were in the harbor waiting for the mule trains to bring the gold from Panama. Then merchants and adventurers from all that part of the world gathered in the village and trade was brisk in the big building now called the custom house, whose ruined walls still are standing. Merchandising, drinking and fighting divided the time until the galleons set sail for Spain with their golden cargoes.

MONKEY A BURGLAR SUSPECT

Chicago Crook Thought by the Police of That City to Have a Simian Assistant.

Some hard-pressed organ grinder has turned burglar and is using his trained monkey as an accomplice, according to the theory advanced by the Chicago police to account for certain mysterious robberies committed recently in the northern part of that city and in Evanston.

The burglarious monkey—if it was a burglar—visited the home of H. B. Wheelock, in Evanston. Monkey footprints were discovered on a window sill and the heavy shoe marks of a man on the ground below.

"It was about midnight when I heard a voice in the open window," said Mrs. Wheelock. "Then I heard a squeal and a soft thud as the animal leaped to the top of the bureau. This was followed by angry squealing. My husband was awakened. I heard a tray in which I kept a few trinkets being slid across the bureau. My husband leaped from bed and groped toward the electric light switch. As he reached the switch the animal gave a shriek and scrambled out of the window."

The police theory is that the owner figured that the monkey would grasp any glittering object it might come upon. The squeals were accounted for on the theory that the rope was jerked so violently as to anger the simian burglar.

VENICE MUST BE ENLARGED

Accommodation of Increasing Population Has Become a Problem for Italian City to Solve.

Venice is confronted by a serious problem. The city is rapidly gaining in population, and so far no place has been found to accommodate the increase. There are now 80,000 inhabitants in Venice in excess of suitable quarters. Among the many plans discussed is the building of new quarters at the Lido island. Another plan contemplates an additional town at the mouth of the Brenta river. To study the whole housing problem, as well as other questions of local importance, prominent citizens have organized a society named "Pro Venezia." The present population is 165,000, against 161,000 in 1911. The cholera kept many tourists from Venice in 1911, entailing a loss of thousands of dollars. Last year there were no such fears, and the biennial art exhibition and the dedication of the restored Campanile brought an unusual number of visitors.

Such Is Fame.

An Indianapolis lawyer, with a friend motored down to Greenfield, Ind., the birthplace of James Whitcomb Riley, the Hoosier poet. They had dinner at the hotel, and thought they would like to see the house where Riley lived. So they asked the hotel man:

"Where is the Riley house?"

"I don't know any hotel by that name," he replied; "though there may be some such boarding house here."

"I mean the James Whitcomb Riley house," said the lawyer, thinking his host had misunderstood.

"I don't know him; you may be able to find his name in the city directory."

"I guess he's moved," said the lawyer, as he aimlessly thumbed the directory.

"Probably," the hotel keeper commented. "Some of them Irish don't stay long in a place!"

No English Mountains.

There is no long range of mountains in England, but there are extensive areas of hill country and many points of considerable height, though not nearly so high as many in this country. The highest point in England is Scofell pike, in the Lake district, 3,210 feet high. The highest point of the Cheviot hills (they say hills instead of mountains) is the Cheviot, 2,670 feet. There is a range of hills called the Pennine, the highest point of which, called the Peak of Derbyshire, is 2,088 feet in height. These altitudes are greatly exceeded by many in different parts of this country. Wales has one point higher than any in England, Snowdon, 3,460 feet.

Frankness Always Best.

Absolute frankness usually works for the good of everybody. Like all rules, this has exceptions, but like other rules it is not much affected by them. No real man wants an unwilling wife, and no true woman wants a husband who does not love her and probably does love somebody else. Money has nothing whatever to do with the case, and would not enter into the calculation of either. To suspect the genuineness of an affection that is balanced against a cash settlement is natural enough and there is little wonder that the world believes that greed or revenge lurks at the base of plans which find their way to a court of law.

Measure of Self.

Judgment is another name for discrimination, whose healthy action is absolutely necessary to that freedom of choice which all have. It is the wrong use of this faculty which leads to all the criticism and condemnation so prevalent in though. "Judge not lest ye be judged" is the statement of a principle. You get back exactly the kind of thought you send out. This is a law that you can prove for yourself. If you are constantly seeing the shortcomings of those about you those shortcomings will appear in yourself. —Unity.

SPECIAL NOTICE

To My Friends and Patrons and The Public at Large.

I have perfected a system for repairing Buggies and Vehicles of all kinds whereby the work is better than ever, wearing longer, holding the luster just twice as long as the usual way of repairing. Another great advantage whereby it is far ahead of the old way is that I use no water on any part of the body or gear until the job is in the last coat of rubbing varnish, and by that time I have all parts of the body well protected, where in doing work the old way we rub with a rubbing stone out of water, called Filler, thereby letting the water get between the pannel of the body and the sill, loosening the plugs, rusting the screws and causing plugs to come out. That is why your pannels break in corners and come loose—water gets in and destroys the glue, letting the water stand there by rotting the wood.

Recollect I have been in the Carriage Business for 35 years, and have made it a life study. I have been working on my Dry System for the last four years and now have it perfected. While there is more work attached to my system and material is more in cost, my price for a Buggy still remains the same—$12.00 for a first-class job of painting and guaranteed to be such. If you want something cheaper in painting I will do it for you but at you risk.

Kelly Rubber Tires.

I have just bought a full supply of the Kelly Springfield Rubber Tires and am prepared to supply your wants at a moment's notice. I have 8,000 pounds now ready to put on while you wait for them at prices to suit everybody that wants a high-grade tire for just the same money they pay other people for a cheap grade. Of course you know I am prepared to do anything for you in the carriage maker's line. Come and see me and get prices and I'll assure you you will go home convinced you have been treated alright.

N. B.—I guarantee the Kelly Tire to be first quality—not second or third grade, and wear twice as long as anyother make of tire.

Yours respectfully,

H. G. COLLINS, Erlanger, Ky.

The Importance of the Hay Crop.

Last year the hay crop was the second in value of the farm crops. The importance of this crop to the farmer can be better realized when it is stated that the value of last year's crop was nearly as great as the combined values of the wheat, tobacco and potato crops. Yet hay is the most neglected of all the big crops. Millions of dollars are lost annually because an effort is not made to care for the crop properly. Not only is no effort made to secure the entire crop but a larger per cent of the crop that is secured is not cured properly nor stored in the right way so as to retain its full feeding value until it can be marketed or fed out on stock on the farm. Adverse weather conditions during the haying season are responsible for some damaged hay, it is true, but in a season of normal weather bad management alone is responsible for the many thousands of tons of damaged hay when the main feeding season arrives in the fall. The labor connected with haying is much too arduous and expensive to have the hay put up in a generally bad condition if good judgment and proper equipment will enable the farmer to harvest his crop in such a condition that he can secure full value from it.

Clearly Defined.

"Potluck" is defied in such a practical way in Limoges, France, that the beholders ever after remembered that it means, "take what you get and say nothing." In a certain corner of that quaint city of losling roo s there is still segregated, much as if in a ghetto, a Saracern population, probably a remnant of the wave of Saracens that swept over Europe hundreds o' years ego. Here they live in their crooked, narrow streets, following old customs handed down from generation to generation. There are many butch- r shops in the quarter and outside of each streams a great pot of soup over a glowing brazier. In each pot stands a ladle as ancient as the pot. When a customer comes with a penny in goes the ladle and comes up full of savory broth and chunks of meat, odd and ends that the butcher has had left over. And what comes up the customer has to take.

Some people are thrown in the shade and others stand in their own light.

METALLIC CARTRIDGES

Made by the Foremost Ammunition Concern in America

THE biggest name in the ammunition and firearms world today is Remington-UMC. Whether your arm is a Remington or any other standard make, whatever its calibre and the load you need, you want Remington-UMC metallics—not because they are necessarily stamped with the same name as your firearm, but because they give more accurate results.

This Company has been making ammunition for fifty years. We produce metallics for every standard make of arm—and every Remington-UMC cartridge is tested in the arm for which it is made.

There is a dealer in this community who can give you Remington-UMC Metallics for your rifle, your pistol. Find him. Ask him for them. Look for the Red Ball Mark on every box of metallics and shot shells you buy.

Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Ailison, of Gardner, Ill., were guests of Dr. and Mrs. B. K. Menefee, whose daughter, Miss Cecil, married their son John Allison, and is now most delightfully situated at Gardner, where Allison & Son own a prosperous banking institution.

Rev. and Mrs. A. Kirtley Johnson were given a surprise shower last week by the members of the Crittenden Baptist church of which he is pastor. A delightful evening was spent together. A large number was present and the contributions were numerous and comprehensive.

Prof. and Mrs. Cleveland Hedges of Bryan, Texas, arrived here last week on a visit to his parents Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Hedges, and will spend a couple of weeks here. Prof. Hedges has made a great success of his department of agriculture in the State College at Bryan and has closed a contract for another year.

Miss Phoebe Whitcomb, of DeLand, Fla., who came here last spring on a visit, was married Wednesday to Haley, of Erlanger, the ceremony taking place at the parsonage at Crescent Springs. The young couple will make their home in Erlanger where the groom's father is engaged in the lumber business.

Last Friday, John C. Miller delightfully entertained at dinner the following: O. S. Watts and wife, Chas. L. Griffith, David B. Wallace, John L. Veet and wife and son. The dinner was given in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Watts, who were here on a short visit from their adopted home at St. Cloud, Florida. They departed for Lexington Saturday, where they will visit relatives and friends, after which they will visit at Bentyville, when they will return to St. Cloud, Florida.

Walton Chapter order of Easter Star, had a most enjoyable meeting Monday night when the following were initiated into the mysteries of the order: Judge and Mrs. J. G. Tomlin, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. J. Grubbs, Mrs. Chas. T. Best, Chas. S. Boles, J. F. Cleek, D. B. Wallace. The historic rendition of the degree of the five pointed stars was very beautifully protrayed by the members aided by Roy D. Stamler. At the close Mrs. Geo. Grubbs was presented with a handsome gold pin emblamical of the order, the gift being from her husband and the presentation speech being made by the Worthy Patron John L. Vest. Several other speeches were made by the candidates and others. An appetizing lunch consisting of delicacies, was served, and a most pleasant evening was enjoyed by all. Those present from out of town were: J. W. Nelson, of Danville, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Menefee, of Crittenden, Mrs. Susie Watson and Harris Watson, of Covington.

Friday morning in the wee smahours a number of our citizens were considerably exercised and frightened by a negro who appeared at their domiciles at this unseemingly hour. His first appearance was at the residence of Dr. C. C. Rankins, who was awakened by the smoke opening the screened window. The doctor having no deadly weapon at hand, seized one of his soiled collars and pointed it at the marauder, who thinking it was a blue steel revolver fell precepitately thru the screen door and fled into the grey dawn. According to report his next appearance was at the home of W. H. Cram, where he entered the bedroom of Misses Eula and Fay Cram where it is stated he seized Miss Fay by the ankle. This was accompanied by a scream as only a young and healthy young lady can emit, and the black disappeared thru the screen door, taking all clinging filament with him. His next appearance was at the residence of Bruce Allen. Mr. Allen not being a very heavy sleeper was aroused by the entry of the individual thru the screen window. Securing his revolver he took several "spot" shots at the intruder but feels satisfied that his marksmanship was bad. At sometime whether preceding these entries or after, he entered the residence of A. J. Rex, where he secured $25 and a gold watch and $11 from Grover Bolington, but the two latter did not discover their loss until Saturday morning. Naturally the theft is charged to the followers of the railroad construction camp on the Q. & C., but the thief may have taken advantage of this feature to throw suspicion off. It is unnecessary to state that our citizens are loaded for the next appearance of this or a like individual. There is no clue. A negro acting suspiciously was arrested Sunday morning and after being asked numerous and divers questions, and no valuables being found upon him, he was placed in jail and kept there until Monday evening when he was released. He gave his name as "Shine" and admitted he cut a dusky damsel at the railroad camp but denied the theft. Monday another negro was arrested and placed in jail for holding up another black man and robbing him of fourteen dollars and some cents at the railroad camp. He will probably be taken to Burlington and tried for the offense. Both negroes are strangers here and were identified with the Southern Railroad construction camp.

JOSEPH I. McWETHY

A Prominent Citizen of Petersburg Precinct Commits Suicide by Drowning in a Cistern.

Joseph I. McWethy, one of the wealthiest and most prominent and highly esteemed citizens of Petersburg precinct, committed suicide by drowning in a cistern at his barn, last Saturday morning. His hat and shoes which were discovered at the cistern were the mute informers of what had occurred. The body had been in the cistern some time when discovered. Mr. McWethy was in the prime of life, industrious and prosperous and his family relations were as pleasant as those of any man, hence no satisfactory cause can be assigned for the rash act.

BEST OF PURIFYING AGENTS

Charcoal and Quicklime Are Nature's Remedy—How to Get Most Lasting Results.

Charcoal and quicklime are the best known purifiers. The best plan for utilising charcoal in the food closet or in the cellar bins where fruits or vegetables are kept is to suspend it in a net bag. Any coarse open net will do. Make a number of bags sufficiently large to hold several large lumps of charcoal. Do not powder the charcoal, but fill the bags with the lumps, and after they have had an opportunity to display their marvelous power to absorb all sorts of bad smells and mustiness, and leave the atmosphere pure and sweet, their usefulness will not be over. Remember that the power of charcoal to serve its purifying purposes is proportioned to its freshness, and the freshening process is restored by heating. At least once a week take the charcoal bags down, empty them in a fire pot kept for the purpose and heat the charcoal very hot. The freshened lumps may then be restored to the net bags and serve a new period of usefulness.

Boxes of lime and jars of plaster are very effective in absorbing dampness, but their useful properties are not fully secured unless these disinfecting and purifying absorbents can be placed in the best form to be effective and easily handled. In the form of a pad with the layers of lime or plaster or a combination of each evenly distributed, their absorbent qualities will be more than doubled.

WOMEN'S BANK MEETS WANT

London Institution, Run By and For the One Sex, Has Proved a Success.

The possibilities of banking as a career for women have been demonstrated by Farrow's Bank for Women, which was inaugurated a couple of years ago in London, and which, managed entirely by women, proved so successful that it was recently moved to new and enlarged quarters.

The bank's success, in the opinion of Mrs. Kate Reilly, the manager, is largely due to the hearty support it has received from women.

"The eagerness with which women of all classes and from all parts of the empire took up the idea of an institution devoted entirely to their needs was in itself a proof that Farrow's novel departure was fulfilling a long-felt want," Mrs. Reilly said.

"Our bank gives women the privilege of consulting one of their own sex about their business affairs.

"The business transacted here is the same as that transacted by any other joint stock bank, and the fact that all our staff consists of women is good evidence that one sex is not more gifted than the other in accuracy and a head for figures.

"A feature of our establishment here is a rendezvous room for our clients, where they can meet their friends and write letters."

Model Farm Colony.

The Brazilian "Jornal do Commercio" announces that the minister of finance of the state of Parana has received from the Brazil Railway company a report of the development of the fazenda at Carambahy, on the railway north of Ponta Grossa, which was acquired by the company to demonstrate the possibility of growing wheat, the latest modern machinery being imported therefor. Eighty houses have been built for colonists, and so far fourteen families have been established in them. The fazenda possesses pedigree stock, Swiss bulls of pure race having been imported, and includes a dairy fitted with most modern appliances, also from Switzerland, for making butter and cheese. An agricultural expert is on the fazenda for the purpose of instructing the colonists. An arrangement has been made for introducing colonists from Holland, and already 400 pounds of Dutch cheese are produced weekly, finding a market in Curityba, Ponta Grossa and Sao Paulo.

Turkish Women's Strong Point.

Turkish women are said to have one accomplishment in which they excel the women of all other nationalities. They know how to sit. Hester Donaldson Jenkins calls attention to the fact that the Turkish verb to sit is used where occidentals would use to live, or stay, or visit. To the question, "Where are you living?" one gets the reply, "I am sitting in Stamboul." Or, to the question, "Are you married?" the answer will be "No, I am sitting at home." And when they sit they sit quietly, "in the perfect repose of a sleeping cat." They don't have to keep their hands busy. They crochet or knit. They just sit.

Nogi's Nerve Tonic.

Having been dedicated to the profession of arms, General Nogi was taken, while still a small boy, to see a criminal decapitated, and was rebuked for shuddering at the spectacle. After nightfall, when all was darkness and silent, he was required to go alone to the burial ground and bring back the culprit's head. The ordeal was designed to strengthen his nerves, and teach him to fear nothing, living or dead.—Francis E. Leupp, in the Atlantic.

In the Meeting.

"Who is that man who is gesticulating so frantically to be recognized by the chairman?"

"I don't know his name, but he is a carpet manufacturer."

"Then by all means let him have the floor."

THINGS THAT ALMOST HAPPEN

Steamboat Captain Tells Why His Hair Is Nearly White, Though He Never Had an Accident.

"It is the things that almost happen which cause gray hairs in this business rather than the things that actually occur," said a veteran captain of an excursion boat to a New York Sun man.

"When I was thirty-three years old I was running a boat to Coney Island. On one occasion, in the lower bay, fog settled down thicker than mush. I held a compass course and everything went smoothly enough until it was almost time to change the course and head from the bay toward Coney. I had heard a boat—by its whistle I knew it was a towing tug—pass me further up the bay.

"Even though I could not see the bow of my boat, I was hanging with my head out of the pilot house window and straining my eyes to see, when my quartermaster, who was standing on the very peak of the bow, called for me to reverse. I rang for full speed astern and threw the wheel hard to port.

"The fog lifted for an instant and dead ahead of me I saw a scow with 'Dynamite' written on its side and a red flag floating above it. I kept the wheel hard over and it seemed to me the engineer was an eternity in getting the engine reversed. We just grazed the scow. I learned afterward that it had been in tow of a tug and that the hawser broke and the tug crew had lost sight of the scow in the fog.

"When I got home that night my wife pointed out a gray hair—the first I had ever had.

"In all my experience I've never had a serious accident, but as you see I have a head full of gray hairs caused by things that almost happened."

M'COY KNEW HUMAN NATURE

Explaining How the Pugilist Was Able to Get His Car Through Jam Where Others Failed.

Kid McCoy drove down in his large, shiny motor. A friend accompanied him. Coming up the avenue was a flock of booting cars. It seemed impossible for McCoy to find a way through.

"Let's turn down a side street, Kid," said the friend. "We'll make by it."

"Watch me," said McCoy.

He turned his head to one side, and looked into the eyes of the alarmed friend. He drove his car right at the approaching covey. Their drivers set up a quacking like a lot of frightened ducks. McCoy drove on, without looking at the road ahead. All the other cars pulled to one side and made way for him. As he passed, all the other drivers leaned out of their cars to make injurious comment upon Mr. McCoy.

"Get your bluff in first," said McCoy. "That's the rule in life that applies to motoring as well as to fighting. If I'd dropped back and honked timidly every one of those guys would have crowded me a little farther into the curb. Because they thought I was a careless, reckless, E-flat mushhead, who'd as lief have an accident as not, they gave me the right of way."—New York Times.

Abbreviation Gone Mad.

There are people in this country who have so much respect for its government and institutions that they almost consider those guilty of treason who spell the capital of the country "W-a-s-h." It is all they can do to restrain themselves when they get a letter dated "Wash., D. C." They would just as soon see one addressed to "Bos., Mass.," although Balt., Md., or Phila., Pa., does not offend so much. Nobody but a human sloth would think of writing on his envelope "Chic., Ill." or "Buff., N. Y." Yet the practice of unauthorized contraction has grown to such an extent that it is high time that business houses lay down the law, as found in the back part of nearly any dictionary, against the practice. And if you follow the feelings of the purists in spelling, you'd dock the man or woman a whole day's pay who is so utterly dead to patriotic instincts as to address a letter to "Wash., D. C."—Wall Street Journal.

Upstairs Backward.

Walking upstairs backward is urged by a London physician as a useful practice in cases of heart weakness and as helping in a more equal distribution of muscular wear and tear.

"Firstly and most important," he says, "walking upstairs backward would prevent any tendency to hurry. No matter how inveterate a 'stair rush' a man might be, he would have to moderate his pace if going backward. This enforced deliberation would, of course, be of great value in heart disease. The second effect would be to relieve the strain from the ordinary walking and climbing muscles (those on the front of the thigh) and to press into service those on the back of the leg, which ordinarily do no work in climbing stairs. The total result, therefore, might be a saving in muscular wear and tear through a more economical distribution of effort. This, of course, would also be of value in cases of heart weakness."

Home of Literature.

"I thought Boston was such a literary town."

"Have trouble while you were there?"

"Had hard work finding a book store, and when I found out they didn't have a bartender's guide."

About Sweet Clover.

One of our subscribers asks how he can secure a good stand of sweet clover. This is a rather difficult thing to do for the young plants are very slow growers. It is not as easy as it might seem, judging from the way this plant grows in the hard, packed soil along so many of our roadsides. A grower who has grown this crop with much success says: "The worst drawback is the difficulty in getting a good stand, as it takes two or three years before a field reaches its best. The best time to sow this crop is as early in the spring as the ground can be thoroughly prepared. Use about 25 to 30 lbs. of seed per acre on the average soil. The crop should be sown with timothy without a nurse crop, and should be pastured, not too heavily, all summer. To get a hay crop, pasturing should be stopped the first part of July or not later than August. When stock is removed the sweet clover grows rapidly and is ready to cut before winter.

At the Iowa Experiment Station, a few years ago, five acres were sown to sweet clover in May. A good stand was secured and during the first summer the field was mowed five inches above the ground and produced one and one-half tons of hay per acre. After the cutting, sheep were pastured on the field until winter. Those who have had success with this crop praise it highly as a pasture crop. It produces abundance of green feed from early spring until late fall and once the crop gets started well it will stand for years without dying out or running down.—Indiana Farmer.

Laugh at Your Burden.

Most of us are bending under the burden of some great load. It may be care, it may be disappointment, it may be injustice, it may be physical pain or spiritual discouragement, but it is heavy. Often it seems heavier than we can bear, and we cry out and protest. These burdens are very real, but really they are not half as big and heavy as we make them, declares a writer in the Universalist Leader. We have had them upon our shoulders, entirely out of our sight, so long that they have been magnified by imagination or weariness or impatience until they seem unbearable. Now, then, what ever your burden may be, however long you have been carrying it and however proud you may have become of your self imposed martyrdom, just take your burden down and look at it honestly, and you will be surprised how it has dwindled away while you have been magnifying it in your mind. Look at it frankly and fearlessly and in nine cases out of ten will your tears be turned to laughter and your sighing into song.

A man seldom laughs at misfortune after he gets a personal introduction to it.

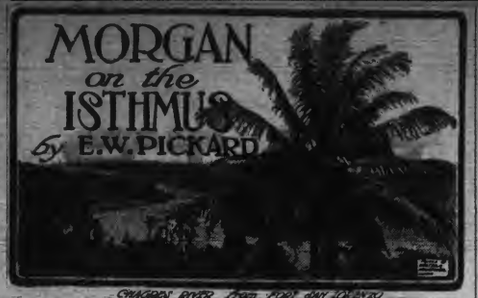
A treat for our readers that we have arranged for is a series of twelve illustrated articles on

The Panama Canal

and the

Isthmus in History and Romance

By Edward W. Pickard



Mr. Pickard is that type of globe-trotting author who seeks the quaint and curious places and people as subjects for his clever descriptive articles. In his present series of twelve articles which we have arranged to print, he has touched not only the actual work of building the canal, and the people who have accomplished it, but has gone into what the newspaper worker knows as the side lines, and which as a rule are of as much interest as the main story. This is particularly true in this case. After our readers have completed the last of Mr. Pickard's articles they will have a better understanding of the Panama Canal, and conditions within and surrounding the canal zone.

You never will be able to get along without a house to live in, but you will be able to get along without a landlord as soon as you build one for yourself.

MORGAN on the ISTHMUS

by E. W. PICKARD

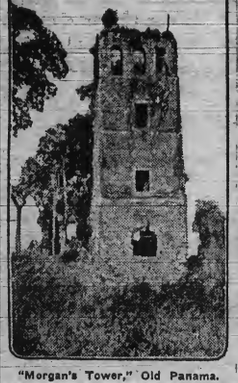
CRUCES AS SEEN FROM FORT SAN LORENZO

Panama, R. P.—It is not given to many men to destroy a city so utterly that it is never rebuilt. That is what Capt. John Morgan, the master buccaneer, did in 1671, when he led his band of cutthroats down from the hills upon Panama. After he had finished with that big, flourishing city there was so little left of it that the Spanish moved five miles west along the coast and there built a new Panama—the Panama we know today.

The story of Morgan's justly famous exploit, often told, never grows stale. It is a wonderful story of desperate bravery, endurance, suffering and ruthless cruelty, and as John Esquemeling was the first to relate it in detail, so he has been the best. Howard Pyle has well said: "In the case of the Esquemeling history, it should be decidedly hands off. One touch of the modern brush would destroy the whole tone of dim colors of the past made misty by the lapse of time."

So I wish I had space to quote the entire story of Morgan and Panama as Esquemeling, who was one of the band, tells it. Some of it, at least, must be given in his quaint language, beginning with the capture by a part of Morgan's fleet of Fort San Lorenzo at the mouth of the Chagres river. Says Esquemeling:

"Captain Brodely being made commander, in three days after his departure (from St. Catherine's) arrived in sight of the said castle of Chagre, by the Spaniards called St. Lawrence. This castle is built on a high mountain at the entry of the river, surrounded by strong pallisades, or wooden walls, filled with earth, which secures them as well as the best wall of stone or brick. The top of this mountain is, in a manner, divided into two parts, between which is a ditch thirty feet deep. The castle hath but one entry, and that by a drawbridge over this ditch. To the land it has four bastions, and to the sea two more. The south part is totally inaccessible, through the cragginess of the mountain. The north is surrounded by the river, which here is very broad. At the foot of the castle, or rather mountain, is a strong fort, with eight great guns, commanding the entry of the river. Not much lower are two other batteries, each of six pieces, to defend likewise the mouth of the river. . . .



"No sooner had the Spaniards perceived the pirates, but they fired incessantly at them with the biggest of their guns. They came to an anchor in a small port about a league from the castle. Next morning, very early, they went ashore and marched through the woods to attack the castle on that side. This march lasted till two of the clock in the afternoon, before they could reach the castle, by reason of the difficulties of the way, and its mire and dirt; and though their guides served them very exactly, yet they came so nigh the castle at first that they lost many of their men by its shot, they being in an open place without covert."

The pirates bravely assaulted the castle, sword in one hand and fireball in the other, but were repulsed with heavy loss. Renewing the attack under cover of darkness, "there happened a very remarkable accident which occasioned their victory. One of the pirates being wounded with an arrow in his back, which pierced his body through, he pulled it out boldly at the side of his breast, and winding a little cotton about it, he put it into his musket, and shot it back to the castle, but the cotton being kindled by the powder, fired two or three houses in the castle, being thatched with palm leaves, which the Spaniards perceived not so soon as was necessary; for this fire meeting with a parcel of powder, blew it up, thereby causing great ruin, and no less consternation to the Spaniards, who were not able to put a stop to it."

Full advantage was taken of this by the buccaneers, and they set fire to the palings and gained a foothold within them, despite "many flaming pots full of combustible matter, and odious smells, which destroyed many of the English." All next morning the fight raged, but about noon the English gained a breach through which they fought their way to the heart of the castle. "The Spaniards who remained alive cast themselves down from the castle into the sea, choosing rather to die thus (few or none surviving the fall) than to ask quarter for their lives. The governor himself retreated to the corps du guard, before which were placed two pieces of cannon; here he still defended himself, not demanding any quarter, till he was killed with a musket shot in the head."

In a few days Captain Morgan arrived with the rest of his fleet and organized the expedition against Panama. He took his men by boat up the Chagres as far as Cruces, now a village not two miles from the canal, and there landed them for the overland march. Leaving 160 men with the boats, he started through the jungle with about a thousand. For days they struggled on, suffering intensely for lack of food, for the Spaniards and Indians had destroyed the villages and crops along the way. At one point they found a number of leathern bags, and "made a huge banquet" upon them. At another a few sacks of meal, some plantains and several jars of wine were discovered in a cave. On the sixth day after leaving Cruces "ascending a high mountain, they discovered the South sea. This happy sight, as if it were the end of their labors, caused infinite joy among them." Then they came to a vale, where they found plenty of cattle, and their period of starvation came to an end with a monstrous feast. "Cutting the flesh into convenient pieces or gobbets, they threw them into the fire and, half carbonaded or roasted, they devoured them, with incredible haste and appetite; such was their hunger, as they more resembled cannibals than Europeans; the blood many times running down their beards to their waists."

That evening the pirate band came in sight of Panama, and pitched their camp, which was ineffectually bombarded all night by the guns of the city. Next day Captain Morgan led his thousand bold men down the hillside and confronted the forces of the governor of Panama, consisting of two squadrons of horse, four regiments of foot and a huge number of wild bulls driven by Indians. The Spaniards began the battle, but their horse were useless, owing to the softness of the ground. The foot were held in check by the fire of the pirates, so the wild bulls were driven forward but, frightened by the noise of the conflict, the animals ran away. After two hours of fighting the surviving Spaniards fled within the city walls. Six hundred of their comrades lay dead upon the field. Morgan at once attacked the city, and though the defense was desperate, many of the pirates being killed, Panama fell within three hours.

What Morgan did to the devoted inhabitants in the effort to find all their hidden treasure is too horrible to relate. Soon after the capture of the city fire broke out in many quarters, and Esquemeling says the conflagration was started by Morgan, though he laid the blame on the Spaniards. Anyway, as the houses were almost all built of cedar, the entire city was soon consumed by flames. Some three weeks later "Captain Morgan departed from Panama, or rather from the place where the city of Panama stood; of the spoils whereof he carried away with him 175 beasts of carriage laden with silver, gold and other precious things, besides about six hundred prisoners, men, women, children and slaves."

Of old Panama naught remains but the ruins of the cathedral, the tower of St. Stanislaus' church and the fragments of a few other stone and brick structures. For more than two centuries they have been buried in the jungle, but are now being brought to view by the efforts of the Panama government, which is having the undergrowth cleared away from the ruins.

The visitor to the isthmus should not fail to make the trip down the Chagres from Gatun to the sea, reversing Morgan's route. The scenery along the river is beautiful, and the great stretch of ocean beach—clean, hard, green and purple sand over which immense breakers roll—is ideal for bathing.

The massive walls of Fort San Lorenzo still stand on the hill at the mouth of the Chagres, and the heaps of cannon balls left by the Spaniards are yet there. In the dungeons of the castle are piles of rusted irons—the fetters which they hoped to fasten on the bodies and limbs of Morgan and his buccaneers.

A Plant That Coughs.

All that have read of carnivorous plants, of laughing plants and of plants that weep, but who has heard of a plant that coughs? There is the authority of a French botanist, however, for the statement that a plant in various tropical regions actually possess the power to cough in the most approved manner. The fruit of this plant resembles the common broad bean. It appears that the coughing plant is something of a crank, that it easily works itself into a rage and that it has a curious of all dust. As soon as a few grains of dust are deposited on its leaves the air chambers that cover their faces and are the respiratory organs of the plant become filled with gas, swell and eild by driving out the gas with a slight explosion and a sound that resembles so much the cough of a child suffering from a cold as to carry a most uncanny sensation to the one beholding the phenomenon. —Chicago Record-Herald.

The DAIRY

SELECTING THE DAIRY SIRE

Best Course for Average Dairyman to Pursue Is to Purchase Bull Calf on Pedigree.

(By W. A. BARR, United States Dairy Division. Colorado Agricultural College.)

Hiram Smith before a Missouri institute was once asked, "What would you buy if going into the dairy business?" He replied, "A bull." The statement that "a good sire is one-half the herd, while a poor one is all of it" should have much significance for the dairyman.

Two cow-testing associations have been organized in this state, by the United States Dairy division. In these associations are 47 of the most representative dairymen, who own 1,000 cows. Thirty-seven per cent. of these herds are headed by grade or scrub bulls. When we consider the 7,000 dairy herds of the state, the cows of which average a trifle more than 100 pounds of fat the past year, then can be seen how vital is the question of the dairy sire when it is the only available means of raising the productive standard of our herds.

For the average dairyman the best course to pursue is the purchase of a bull calf on the strength of his ancestors, preferably the dam, and trust that he will transmit the desirable characteristics to a high degree. In the selection of a sire give reliance to close ancestry, in preference to blood of the fourth, fifth and sixth generation. We often hear a man say that his bull is a Golden Lad or a De Kol, when an examination of the pedigree shows the famous individual is five or six generations distant, which means about 1½ to 3 per cent. of the noted individual's blood.

When purchasing a sire, see if possible his dam. She should be of good size for the breed, a regular breeder, possess a strong constitution and vitality, with well-developed barrel mammary system and have made a good yearly official record.

DANGEROUS DISEASE OF COW

Every Case of Abortion Should Be Regarded With Suspicion Until Proven Otherwise.

Cows which have aborted one or two times should be disposed of only if they fail to conceive after a subsequent covering, provided they have received suitable disinfecting treatment. By keeping pregnant animals the disease will be brought to a standstill more quickly than if new susceptible material is continually added in their place. Some cows apparently become immune without aborting. It is the history of the disease in the great majority of herds that after reaching its height, it gradually subsides of its own accord until only a few slips occur each year or it may disappear entirely. In herds where abortions have not occurred for several years, or at least only rarely, the owner should take particular pains to prevent its introduction. Every case of abortion should be regarded as suspicious until proven otherwise. If a slip occurs the cow should be isolated at once and treated as directed above. The portions of the stall or corral contaminated by her discharge should be disinfected, or if the abortion has occurred at pasture, the fetus and afterbirth should be searched for and removed and the infected spot of ground where they have lain should be burned over.

Kindness Pays.

Treat the cows kindly. Two years ago I bought a three-year-old cow that was very wild. I could not get near her in the pasture, but before I had her a month I could go up to her with a rope in my hand and she would not run. Last year we bought a yearling that was the same way. I give all my cows a name and they know it. Be kind to the cows and you will have no wild ones.—R. J. Kerslake.

Buying Grade Calves.

The dairy sections in the vicinities of the large cities are splendid places to buy grade calves with which to build up the herd. If one is careful in making his selection he can get good grade stock practically at veal prices.

Mr. James Staples, a prominent Trimble county farmer, residing near Bedford, was horribly gored by an angry bull last Friday afternoon while attempting to cross the pasture in which the animal was grazing. Mr. Staples was wearing a red bandana handkerchief around his neck, and as soon as the animal saw the crimson he became infuriated and charged his helpless owner with murderous intentions. Every effort was made by the farmer to evade his pursuer, but in vain. Being overtaken by the cloven-footed beast, he was trampled to earth, and the long, sharp horns plunged deep into his body, his thorax and abdomen being pierced. His intestines and lungs are injured and four ribs on the left side were broken.—Milton News.

"I was cured of diarrhoea by one dose of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, writes M. E. Gebhardt, Oriole, Pa. There is nothing better. For sale by J. W. Berkshire & Son and E. E. Kelly.

Your correspondent received quite a surprise one morning last week when he opened the store. On opening the door he thought he heard a little chicken chirping but never thought but what it was out in the back yard, so he went on opening the windows etc., until he finally came around close to a case of eggs, when he thought the sound eminated from that locality. So upon closer investigation he was sure the chirping was in the case. So he began taking out and eggs, and when he lifted the cardboard between the last filler and the one just above, lo, and behold there sat a little newly hatched chick in one of the cells for the eggs. It seemed pert and healthy. Upon examination another egg was found pipped and in a short while yet another. All three eggs hatched and the chicks are alive and doing well at this writing.—Madisonville Histler.

SPECIAL NOTICE

To My Friends and Patrons and The Public at Large.

I have perfected a system for repairing Buggies and Vehicles of all kinds whereby the work is better than ever, wearing longer, holding the luster just twice as long as the usual way of repairing. Another great advantage whereby it is far ahead of the old way is that I use no water on any part of the body or gear until the job is in the last coat of rubbing varnish, and by that time I have all parts of the body well protected, where in doing work the old way we rub with a rubbing stone out of water, called Filler, thereby letting the water get between the pannel of the body and the sill, loosening the plugs, rusting the screws and causing plugs to come out. That is why your pannels break in corners and come loose—water gets in and destroys the glue, letting the water stand there by rotting the wood.

Recollect I have been in the Carriage Business for 35 years, and have made it a life study. I have been working on my Dry System for the last four years and now have it perfected. While there is more work attached to my system and material is more in cost, my price for a Buggy still remains the same—$12.00 for a first-class job of painting and guaranteed to be such. If you want something cheaper in painting I will do it for you but at you risk.

Kelly Rubber Tires.

I have just bought a full supply of the Kelly Springfield Rubber Tires and am prepared to supply your wants at a moment's notice. I have 3,000 pounds now ready to put on while you wait for them at prices to suit everybody that wants a high-grade tire for just the same money they pay other people for a cheap grade. Of course you know I am prepared to do anything for you in the carriage maker's line. Come and see me and get prices and I'll assure you you will go home convinced you have been treated alright.

N. B.—I guarantee the Kelly Tire to be first quality—not second or third grade, and wear twice as long as anyother make of tire.

Yours respectfully,
H. G. COLLINS, Erlanger, Ky.

You will see that old friend at the Florence fair if you attend this week, and that is what you intend to do, is it not?

Local Happenings.

NOTICE.

We, the undersigned committee acting for the five hundred and thirty-five (535) petitioners to take the vote in Boone county on Free Turnpikes, hereby respectfully call a meeting of said petitioners, and all others who are really interested in this Good Road movement, at Burlington, Kentucky, on county court day next, being Monday, September 1, 1913, at 2 o'clock, p. m.

This meeting will be of vital importance to this movement for Good Roads, so do not fail to be present.

Committee: — M. J. Crouch, A. Rogers, L. W. Gaines, J. G. Toulin

Next Monday is county court day.

The nights and mornings are cool.

The melancholly days are at hand again.

A little too cool last week for good fair weather.

Dudley Blyth has improved the looks of his residence by having it repainted.

Chas. Maurer spent last Sunday with Xen Scott out on the Belleview pike.

Of late Sunday has become Sheriff Hume's busiest day in criminal business.

Boone county was very much in evidence at the Erlanger fair last Saturday afternoon.

Johnnie Duncan took 2nd premium on his suckling colt at the Erlanger fair last week.

There has been considerable improvement in the crops in this county during the last ten days.

F. P. Walton has had repapered and repainted the interior of the store room occupied by E. E. Kelly.

Mrs. John M. Botts and son, Carl, of Petersburg, were guests of her daughter, Mrs. Dudley Blyth, last Friday.

Mrs. James E. Smith had fifteen entries in fancy needle work at the Erlanger fair, last week, and took thirteen first premiums.

There was a big German picnic at the Erlanger fair grounds last Sunday. Everything passed off quietly and all seemed to have a good time.

Rev. Geo. Smith is holding a protracted meeting at Woolper school house. Preaching every night this week and next Sunday afternoon.

The millet harvest is on, and the crop seems to be very good. Some have cowpeas mixed with the millet which will increase its value as a food for stock.

The time for sowing wheat is near at hand. That is a crop that is growing smaller year by year in this county, while rye seems to be coming in favor again.

It looks like everybody in the county has begun talking good roads, but there seems to be a division of opinion as to the plan to pursue to get them the quickest.

Chas. Westbay has put his team into the coal hauling business for the fall campaign. He has contracted to haul a large quantity of coal this fall for the local consumers.

In this issue appears an article on Woman's Suffrage, the same having been read at a meeting of the Boone County Pomona Grange some time since, by Mrs. J. L. Frazier, of Union.

Clifford Hedges brought to this office one day the past week two very large ears of green corn, the like of which he thinks can be found in very few fields in the county this year.

Onnie Rouse, who resides over on Gunpowder creek, filled his large silo last week. Several new silos are being constructed in this part of the county this week. L. T. Clore near town is having one put up.

The tobacco men say the crop in this county this year is of a better quality than that of last year. The crop has improved greatly in the last two weeks. It is a crop that has a habit of making good in the last weeks of its growth.

Noah Moody, of Switzerland co. Indiana, and Mrs. Rose Bradberry, of Burlington, were married at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. Martha Delph, on Woolper, last Thursday afternoon. Mr. and Mrs. Moody will make their home in Indiana.

Michael Ruschart, of the Lawrenceburg Marble and Granite Works, was over last Thursday, and erected a nice stone at the grave of Mr. Alfred Cason, in the Odd-Fellows cemetery. The work was sold thru the firm's local agent, D. M. Snyder.

Next Monday is county court day at which time W. T. Stott, of Petersburg, Democratic nominee for the legislature, will celebrate his victory by treating the crowd in town that day to a wagon load of luscious watermelons, such only as can be produced in the Petersburg melon fields.

WILL EQUAL SUFFRAGE TEND TO PURIFY POLITICS?

Paper Read by Mrs. J. L. Frazier at a Meeting of Boone County Pomona Grange.

That women have the right to vote I maintain; that they have the wisdom to do so I assert without fear of refutation; and their interest in general welfare and determination to become qualified voters will in time bring the ballot to them I am sure. That this will tend to "purify politics," no one can doubt. The matter of equal suffrage is one of vast moment—far too important to be idly considered and only the insistence of our Lecturer has induced me to write this paper.

One plea against our voting is that only women of low grade, morally and intellectually, will go to the polls, while good women will stay by their firesides. Not a man is there in the State who is not convinced that there could never be found so many low grade, dishonest, drunken, intellectually weak women as there were men who voted in our recent election. There were men so drunk they had to be supported to the polls—and this in the face of an enactment that forbids the offering of even a cigar with the view of influencing a vote. Valiant men you are, my brothers! How bravely you uphold the laws! If women were voters such men as those would not be at large, for there are more women than men, and many more women of pure morals and just views than bad ones. Whisky and beer and money dispensed by men whose names are on our church rolls and by some who hold office in our churches, to influence men to vote for their favorite candidate; defamation of character; remitting of fines by court officials—these are some of the things men do. Do you believe your wives and daughters would do these things?

The militant methods of London Suffragettes are justly abhorrent to the minds of men and sane-minded women, yet there has been no great reformation without the shedding of blood—no great good accomplished without martyrdom. We must allow, too, for sensational press report and not accept all we read as true. That these English Crusaders have been lawless, we admit, but women did not cause the murder of Gov. Goebel, of Presidents Garfield and McKinley, the burning of the Hamilton co. Ohio, court house, nor the thousand and one crimes that have been and are being committed in the political world.

You must agree that the treatment of the Suffragettes in Washington at the time of President Wilson's inauguration was infamous. Perhaps not one of us would have gone on that expedition, but I am convinced that women as honest in purpose and as good as we, were in the procession.

Some of the things women have done in politics forecasts what they will do when given the ballot. In Seattle and Tacoma, Washington, their work in the recall of Mayors who were not only permitting vice of the evilest kind, but inviting it to remain in their cities, is well known. Even the strongest anti-suffrage journals published accounts of these momentous successes. We must not think that Seattle is the only place where a system, backed by financial resources is abroad to lure our girls and boys from the narrow way into the broad highway of sin. In our own county, in the past 10 years, a startling array of evil happenings have come to light and many more instances of wrong living would be uncovered but for lack of moral courage on the part of our men. We have no mayor to recall but if we ever vote, dear sisters, let us see that our officials are brave enough to enforce the laws, and if our laws are not adequate let it be our task to see that better ones are made. I believe in the brotherhood of man and in the broadest and tenderest charity, but there is only one way to evict sin from our bounds. It must be denounced and the sinner must be punished. A man or a woman swerves from the right way and after the "pleasures of sin for a season" have palled, he returns to his wonted place in the community, apparently unrepentant, and even if he repents he can never undo the wrong he has done. If he or she goes free of punishment, others weak in morals, will more readily yield to temptation. There must be punishment meted out and the Gospel of eternal penalty preached more emphatically from our pulpits, if we desire a cessation of sin. In various large cities an investigation of the MORAL condition of working girls has been going on. This is directly the outcome of the famous and most worthy Mann bill, but it seems to me it would be pertinent to investigate the IMMORAL condition of men, especially of the leisure classes. I believe that women, as voters, would be equally urgent in the condemnation of sin in their own sex as in men; whereas, men pitilessly condemn women and condone, even entirely excuse the awful sins of men. Before there can be social purity, there must be established the same standard for both sexes and this will never be done until women are on the same civil footing.

In Hammond, Indiana, a young woman teacher beholding Vice at large, instituted investigation and against great odds overthrew a corrupt city government and so interested the women of the place that in the end the city has become clean and fit for the homes of their children. Graft and encouragement of vice were discovered by the women voters of California and the indictment and conviction of men in high places were accomplished. The final conviction of the McNamaras was largely due to their efforts.

A little woman, of Oklahoma, Miss Kate Barnard, tho threatened with all kinds of evil and bombarded with all manner of missiles while delivering her earnest appeals, has succeeded in establishing in her state a Bureau for the Protection of Children and Indians—much needed reform.

If we could vote, my sisters, I think we would not be so easily bribed as some men nor would we use bribes to secure votes. We would enforce the laws more rigidly than men, for as Kipling says, "The female of the species is purer than the male." We have as a class, suffered so poignantly from the effects of the sins that follow in the train of whisky drinking, gambling and disloyalty that fierceness born of despair has crowded out the softer, forgiving traits of our character and left us ripe for action.

In historical record found in the Old Testament, we discover that women have held positions of prominence and importance. Miriam, as a leader, ranked with Moses and Aaron, and her mistakes were not greater than theirs.

Deborah, a divinely appointed judge of Israel, who not only instigated but led to lead the cowardly Barak in an invasion of Sisera's territory, Joel an instrument in the hands of God to destroy Sisera, and Anna, the Prophetess of the New Testament, are notable examples of feminine ability.

Queen Elizabeth faced the entire Catholic world, defeated Philip of Spain with his famous Armada, and made Protestantism possible today.

The wonderful "Child of Destiny," Napoleon Bonaparte, so feared the diplomacy of political mind of Madame De Stael, he banished her, yet she largely contributed to his final overthrow.

The reign of Victoria stands out for all time as the grandest whether directed by king or Queen, while accomplishing a conjugal alliance after her own heart and rearing nine children, she was ruling her vast kingdoms, principalities and empires with wisdom and kindness that exceeded that of any other monarch, and without as much "power behind the throne" as prompts any other ruler of today or any period.

In our own times, sweet Wilhelmina, of Holland, governs her devoted subjects and conducts her household with wisdom and firmness and we free-born Americans admire her womanliness no less than we do her statesmenship.

It is claimed that the women of our land are not logical nor stable enough to meet and dispose of the exigencies of affairs of State, but as they have ever been deprived of opportunity to develop legislative, judicial and executive ability how is one to judge what they may achieve in the new order of things?

Another plea against us is, that if we were to enter the arena of politics the home would be neglected and the foundation of life be undermined. To meet this I remind you that it is conceded that men of fame in every case, inherit the particular trait which makes them famous from their mothers; hence, if women become better versed in political love, better statesmen will be born and they will be better trained to decide the great questions and fight the great diplomatic battles of our government. In this day of devices to lighten the work of the housemother and of ready to wear garments to be purchased for less than the cost of those spun, woven and stitched by the weary fingers of our grandmothers, women have more time to devote to thought of other women's rights and wrongs. Because there are more women than men there are battalions of spinsters who have no households to keep them employed and these brave, good women are leading in the march of progress and by their work are making over foul municipalities into clean and wholesome abiding places, and have succeeded in many instances in having laws passed to relieve the suffering of widows and orphans. Thus it is proved that "votes for women" is no idle cry for a useless toy.

Men have always borne the burden of making laws to govern us and now when we modestly request them to allow us to bear half of this load we wonder that they refuse to share it.

In the beginning of what Arnold Bennett calls "Your United States" its men were not trained thinkers, most of them being uneducated. Only a few statesmen there were to leaven the lump but in less than two hundred years there has been a development of political sagacity that challenges the world. Given a chance, woman may reach as high attainments in time. She wants the opportunity to grow; is trying to get it and we are sure she will succeed.

It is not for the rights of the sheltered and cherished women here, I am pleading. We all have our rights in our homes and in the Grange. It is for the sake of the oppressed—the young girls and little children; the wives of foreigners upon our shores; all who suffer and die because of the bondage of sin and ignorance, dishonesty and relentless greed, that this cry for equal suffrage goes up.

In our Order, wife and daughter stand by father and son and few, indeed, are there of our brothers who do not believe that "taxation without representation" is wrong.

As I have said, when women are free and equal, then will come social purity, justice and probity in the world of finance, and peace at home and abroad. The plea that women can not go to war will be met by the fact that there will be no battles to fight that necessitate shouldering of arms.

For You and Your Wife

A cheerful, pretty bedroom will help you to start your day in a cheerful, pleasant mood. Its a haven of rest for you to come back to at night. And all day long its a pleasure to your wife.

To make a pretty bedroom it is more important to have tasteful furniture that harmonizes, than furniture that merely costs a lot. A brass bed, or a pretty iron bed if you prefer, dresser and chiffonier, a low rocking chair and one or two straight back chairs to match, a shirtwaist box, light colored rug on the floor,—all this does not cost vrey much, IF YOU BUY FROM US, and makes a truly pretty room. Come in and talk it over.

Don't forget to get a STEARNS & FOSTER mattress. That is what makes your bedroom a haven of rest. No other mattress is so comfortable.

Made in all grades of superiority; $9.00 upward. Windsor Grade at $13.50 is guaranteed SUPERIOR TO ANY OTHER ADVERTISED MATTRESS. We sell it on 60 nights trial. If you CAN part with it at the end of that time we will return your money without question or comment.

NOT PEPPERMINT BUT STRONG

Illiterate Man Was Not to Be Convinced That He Had Really Smelt Nothing.

At a certain northern Chautauqua gathering last summer a lecturer, at the opening of his address, came to the front of the platform and took a small vial from his pocket.

"My friends," he said, "before I begin my address, I wish to test the ventilation of this auditorium. I am going to pour out this oil of peppermint. When the odor reaches you, raise your hands, so that I may see how rapidly it travels."

He emptied the vial, and almost instantly several hands on the front benches went up; then farther back the hands began to go up by the dozens, until at last the people in the last seats caught the odor, and raised their hands.

The lecturer thanked his auditors, and went on with his address. When he had almost finished, and was speaking of the effect of the imagination on our senses, he paused, and said with a smile that it was only clear water he had poured out of his vial.

The audience had been caught so neatly that even those who had held up their hands joined in the laugh. But one illiterate fellow, whose hand had gone up more promptly and emphatically than any other, did not quite understand.

"What they laughin' at?" he asked, audibly, of the man sitting beside him.

"Why," explained the man, "you did not smell peppermint at all; it was only imagination."

"Well," said the other, "I knowed it was somethin' that smelled mighty strong."—Youth's Companion.

LITTLE KNOWN OF HEREDITY

Much Talk on the Subject, But World Still Awaits a Satisfactory Explanation.

There are few subjects on which so much "scientific" nonsense is talked and written as on heredity. Not very much is known of it as regards plants, less of animals, and almost nothing as regards humanity, writes H. Fielding-Hall in the Atlantic. To read books on heredity, especially those of the Eugenic society, is to read a mass of suppositions and hazardous inductions where most of the facts are negative, and only the exceptions are positive. The very meaning of "hereditary" is not understood. If any quality is truly hereditary, then it is always hereditary. It never occurs except as the results of heredity, and it is constant, that is to say, it invariably follows. But there is no quality of which this can be said. That genius is not hereditary is known. Even talent is not. Nor is any aptitude. A lawyer's son more often wants to be a soldier or an artist than a lawyer, notwithstanding the environment, and it is so with most professions. The exceptions seem to be due to training and influence, not to any hereditary transmission. A superficial likeness to parents seems hereditary, but that is all that we can assert, and that outward likeness by no means infers an inward likeness. There is nothing to attribute to heredity what is due to training or want of training. It excuses supineness in governments and professions.

Without Food Twenty-eight Days.

A remarkable feat of involuntary fasting was performed 12 years ago by a corporal in a regiment of French colonial infantry. On his way to work one morning a man heard cries proceeding from a disused mine, near Brest. At the bottom of an excavation nearly 100 feet deep Corporal Andre Desrats was found in so weak a condition that he could hardly articulate a word. When he recovered his rescuers learned that, after accidentally falling into the mine, Desrats had been imprisoned for twenty-eight days without anything to eat or drink. But a pig can beat a man. Dr. W. B. Carpenter in his Manual of Physiology records that a pig weighing 160 pounds was entombed by the fall of a portion of the chalk cliffs at Dover. It was dug out 160 days later, and found to be still alive, but reduced in weight to 40 pounds.

Of Course.

A New York dramatic writer tells of an actress of great popularity who is just beginning to be obsessed with the notion that the public holds her to be older than she really is.

The writer was assigned to interview this player. He wished to obtain her views with reference to the state of the drama, a topic whereon the actress did not seem particularly anxious to decant.

"It does not seem to me," gently suggested the interviewer, with a smile, "that I am really ascertaining your opinion. You ought to be frank, since your eyes are gray and—"

"Prematurely so, my dear boy, prematurely so," the actress hastened to assure him.—Judge.

Walking at Billiards.

"I figure out," said one of the billiard experts playing in the championship games, "that I walk three miles when I play 400 points. Of course, sometimes I do less than that, provided my average runs by nursing are larger. When I can keep the balls closely together for a good run, that lessens the distance I have to walk."

This one artist said he once made 100 points and did not circle the table half a dozen times. More amazing still was the assertion that he had seen the late Jacob Schaefer run 150 points without going even once entirely around the table.

R. W. Kline, teacher at Pond Lick, has demonstrated that a man can teach domestic science. Mr. Kline has his students read about bread-making in class, using a bulletin sometimes instead of a reader, and then go home and bake bread by the recipe and bring samples to school. Lin Martin, the official school painter, of Rowan county, sampled some of this bread and pronounced it the finest he ever ate. The cooking class of Pond Lick recently gave a box supper and let the whole district sample their cooking, and everybody had a taste of the good things prepared under the directions learned at school. Dust On Rural Roads.

The drouth which has been prevailing over a large portion of Kentucky has accentuated the dust nuisance on the country roads. Overland travel in most localities is thereby robbed of much of its attractiveness.

Cities and towns can keep keep down the dust by the application of oil to the dusty streets or by the continuous use of the water wagon. But sprinkling carts are not known on country roads and the practice of oiling the public highways in Kentucky has not made much headway. In future, perhaps it will become more general, but there is small prospect that it will do so at any early day.

The growth of automobile travel on the rural roads makes the dust problem more serious than ever before. The unpleasantness of a dusty road is not experienced alone by those who travel the thoroughfare, but is impressed very strongly on persons who dwell by the roadside. Flying clouds of dust are quite as annoying in country as in city, and they detract largely from the comfort of rural residents. They also add materially to the cares of the careful housewife.

Dust is not merely a nuisance. It is a menace to health. The menace may not be as great on the country roads as it in the city streets, but the element of hazard is present wherever the dust may be—and the hazard grows with increasing dust and increasing travel. The time seems to be coming when the dust evil will be almost as serious in the country as in the city, and when measures will have to be adopted for its mitigation. —C.-J.

WITH A SHOT GUN

Lou Phelps Kills William Zuelli, Blowing The Top of His Head Off.

Lou Phelps shot and killed William Zuelli in his tent at Taylorsport, last Saturday night about 9:30 o'clock, blowing one side of Zuelli's head off with a shot gun. Phelps is a carpenter and has been engaged at work in Delhi for some time, and last Saturday night he was coming to this side of the river in the skiff with Zuelli, his son and his son-in-law, and says that when the skiff was some distance out in the river the Zuelli parties began rocking it in a furious manner, when he asked them to stop, telling them that he could not swim, but they paid no attention to his entreaties, and it was not long until he was thrown into the river, when Zuelli jumped out onto him and began trying to go through his pockets. He succeeded in getting away from Zuelli, and having gotten an oar in his struggle he managed to reach the Kentucky shore. When he got home he changed his clothes and went out in town to borrow a gun which he finally got from one of his neighbors, when he went to the tent in which the Zuellis resided and found them seated at the table eating supper. Phelps says when he reached the tent his heart failed him, but when he heard the old man say, "if we had kept him under the water a little longer I would have got the bottle of whisky he had if nothing else," this so enraged him that he raised his gun, saying, "you would would you?" and as Zuelli looked around he fired at very close range, the load of shot taking effect in one side of the face, tearing it almost from the neck. It is probable that Phelps would have killed the other two men had they not taken the gun from him. After being disarmed Phelps went to L. H. Sprague's and told him what he had done and requested him to telephone Sheriff Hume to arrest him. Mr. Sprague complied with the request, and the Sheriff summoned J. M. Eddins to accompany him and they hastened to the scene of the tragedy, where they found a considerable crowd of excited people, Phelps appearing to be the most composed individual among them. It was between one and two o'clock Sunday morning when the officer returned with his prisoner and lodged him in jail.

The two men seated at the table with Zuelli at the time he was shot say that they were talking about the episode in the river when the old man remarked, "I had a hard time to keep Phelps from drowning," but this Phelps stoutly denies.

Coroner Murat was called and held an inquest, and returned a verdict simply stating how Zuelli came to his death, and it is very doubtful if the public is ever thoroughly satisfied as to what occurred in the skiff and why Phelps was thrown into the river.

Phelps is a man about 45 years old and has a wife and several children ranging in age from 2 to 21 years of age. Zuelli is somewhere in the fifties and had been occupying a tent in Taylorsport for some time.

If the men ever had any trouble before last Saturday night none of their neighbors knew anything about it.

Taylorsport and vicinity is worked up as never before and the people deplore the tragedy. Phelp's examining trial will be held next Monday in Burlington.

THE ERLANGER FAIR

Attended by Large Crowd—Plenty of Fine Stock—Fine Exhibits.

Taken as a whole the weather last week was decidedly favorable to the Erlanger fair and the attendance was large, especially on Friday and Saturday when the crowds were about as large as could be accommodated.

Considerable good stock was shown, among the exhibitors being the old timers Brock, Best, Crenshaw, Biggers and Gateskill with numerous local men who had quite a number of handsome animals in the several rings, and who pulled down many of the good prizes.

The half mile track was in fine condition and the racing each afternoon was exciting, many of the finishes being very close. The betting on these events was spirited but no very large sums changed hands on any of the results.

All manner of games for the amusement of those who like to invest in chances were on the grounds and there seemed to be plenty of money to invest in them with the nerve to back it, and a merry crowd surrounded these games at all times.

"Were all medicines as meritorious as Chamberlain's Cholera, Colic and Diarrhoea Remedy the world would be much better off and the percentage of suffering greatly decreased," writes Lindsay Scott, of Temple, Ind. For sale by J. W. Berkshire and Son and E. E. Kelly.

Remember Jack Edding' auto will be in the passenger business again this week, making schedule trips between Burlington and the Florence fair.

You can have more fun in youth by spending all your money then, but you can have more comfort in age by building you a home in youth.

Lassing to Resign.

When in Burlington during the last term of the Boone circuit court Appellate Judge John M. Lassing made known to several of his friends his intention to resign as one of the Judges of the Court of Appeals, his resignation to be tendered when that court convenes in September. He has several years yet to serve, but he has not been in robust health for some time, besides he has numerous business interests that demand his attention, which conditions have caused him to decide upon the step he will take. Judge Lassing's work on the bench has resulted in opinions in several of the most important cases that have come before that tribunal since he became a member thereof, and in every instance these opinions have been heartily endorsed by the State over by both the public and the members of the bar. He has made a painstaking, industrious judge, dispensing justice without fear or favor. As yet no one has been suggested as Judge Lassing's probable successor.

GOOD ROADS.

[M. J. CROUCH]

At the conclusion of our previous article on this subject, we put the question: "Shall we not say that back of this proposition is the demand of the mass of the intelligent citizenship of Boone county?"

This proposition of good roads is of more vital importance to us than anyother business proposition that is or could come before us.

This importance is being recognized as never before all over this United States, not only by individuals but communities, countirs, States and the national government. Recognizing beyond a doubt that good roads are not only desirable but absolutely necessary for our well neing, our future progress, prosperity and happiness, and then we are ready to discuss how we may best obtain them. We, as individuals as well as communities or counties are not willing to pay the price until we really and sincerely desire these things. This is true of any commodity or improvemant as well as good roads—free pikes, a proper road system supported by taxation. When our development, our education or progress has reached this point, we demand these thigs. That all improvements, material or moral or intellectual cost a certain effort or price, when we have reached this point to make the effort to pay the price the victory is already won. We should know and do know that it costs much money to build and maintain churches and schools, but we are willing to pay the price for we have been educated to appreciate their importance, and so no intelligent, civilized county is without them any more than a fist class city would do without well paved streets and pavements. We are bound to admit that these things and many others we could name mark our progress toward a higher civilization, toward greater attainments.

Now, free pikes is our slogan because it is the first step in an effort to obtain good roads. It not only means that we must make the roads that we now have free roads, but we are to build good roads all over the county, every thoroughfare where ever the travel or interest of the public may demand them. We believe in free pikes because we believe the public should own our public roads. Besides, we admit that wherever we find good roads they are owned by the county, state or nation and not by private individuals who put a pole across the public highways. These obstructions to progress and travel mark that county as surely as Cain was marked and branded a murderer. Whoever saw Cain knew that God had marked him thus, so whoever sees a pole across the public highway knows surely, know for a certainty that county is nonprogressive—it has the curse and mark of Cain upon its brow.

One by one our neighbor counties have removed this brand and now only have free pikes, free roads but better roads than we. Let any one who doubts travel through Central Kentucky in fact most anywhere the natural conditions will permit and he will find free roads and better roads maintained by a proper road tax and working system. But enough for the present. We do not wish nor do we intend to prolong this discussion. What we do wish now is to explain our part in filing the petition of five hundred and thirty-five legal voters of Boone county for a vote on free pikes and good roads. I have taken the initiative in this effort at the earnest request of many good friends of this movement, who, recognizing my efforts in the past for good roads, felt that I should do this work now. So far I feel that I have done my part and in concluding I appeal to every intelligent, public spirited, good citizen of this county to come forward and do his part for good roads and the beginning of a better era—an era of progress and greater prosperity.

You should spend at the fair at Florence this week at least two days. It is a great place at which to meet old acquaintances and form new ones. It is somewhat of a home-coming for Boone county people who have cast their lots in distant territory and are always glad to meet old acquaintances for which purpose they journey to the Boone fair.

If your living in a house made the house more valuable, if the house were yours you would reap the profit.

SUGAR PUT TO VARIOUS USES

In Much Demand for the Industries, and in Processes That Would Be Suspected by Few.

If all the sugar that is eaten in the course of a year were to be equally divided, every person in the world would have at least twenty pounds. But, besides being used as food, sugar has many industrial uses. It is the cheapest form of a chemically pure carbohydrate, and is often used in place of starch, dextrin, or glucose.

Sugar is frequently put in compounds for removing and preventing boiler scale. It is used in the manufacture of shoeblacking, transparent soap, copying ink, and ink rollers for printing presses. Certain explosives contain from six to forty per cent. of it. It is employed in dying establishments, by tanneries for "filling" leather, and in a large number of other industries.

Sugar has a hardening and strengthening action in mortar. The mortar used to rebuild the Museum of Natural History in Berlin consisted of one part lime, one part sand and two parts sugar. Even a very small quantity, however, as little as one-quarter of one per cent., exerts a very harmful effect on cement.—Youth's Companion.

PROBABLY TOUCHED THE SPOT

Episcopal Blessing Seemed to Indicate That the Toddy Was Not at All Unwelcome.

In the course of those official goings about which are called visitations, Bishop A. M. Randolph of Virginia once found himself in a remote country parish. He was the guest as usual of a senior warden, and he arrived upon a day of rain, and sleet, and nipping winds. In the absence of her husband about the week-day business of bread-winning, the good lady of the house showed the bishop to his room, where a fire burned brightly, and then debated whether she should send him up a hot toddy. She felt in her motherly soul that after such a drive a man of the bishop's age should have a hot toddy, but she did not know whether this particular bishop might not be a teetotaler.

Finally her hospitable instincts overcame her scuples. She mixed the toddy. But she dared not take it up to the bishop herself. She called her little daughter, aged eight, coached the child in a proper little speech, handed her the glass, and told her to take it carefully to the bishop's door, knock, and wait for results.

The little girl went, and very soon came back—without the toddy.

"What did the bishop say?" asked the anxious mother.

"I knocked on the door," replied the messenger, "and he opened it real quick and reached out his hand and said, 'Bless you, my child.'"—New York Evening Post.

Royal Widow's Woes.

Poor old Francis Joseph, emperor of Austria, is again called upon to use his kindly offices by another distressed lady who desires the approval of the pope to the divorce recently granted to her by the civil courts. The lady is the Archduchess Isabella, who married Prince George of Bavaria, a union that was but for a day. Pius X. has ratified the legal decisions, but has ordered as a penance for the lady that for six months she shall remain retired in the Red Cross convent and minister to the sick. The archduchess finds this prescription of the pope altogether too severe, as she desires to attend the wedding of her cousin, the prince of Croy, with Miss Nancy Leishman, daughter of the United States minister to Berlin. In the meantime Francis Joseph will do what he can to relieve the lady of the discipline inflicted by the church.

How Capital Grows!

Lytham has benefited to the remarkable extent by the growth of its prosperous neighbor, Blackpool, says the London Chronicle. Two centuries ago the sum of £5 was bequeathed for the education of the children of poor inhabitants of Lytham. In course of time the fund grew to nearly £500, and this sum was invested by the trustees of the Lytham charities in a plot of land, which now forms the center of Blackpool. Within the last 50 years the corporation of Blackpool has paid about £100,000 for the freehold rights of small sections of this estate, and it is believed that in course of time the value of the property owned by the charities will reach £500,000.

Civil War Debt.

Civil war means something besides battle. When Lee surrendered at Appomattox each person then living in the United States had on his or her shoulders a federal debt of about $80. Today each inhabitant's share of interest-bearing debt is approximately $10. At the earlier date two-thirds of all the government debt paid six per cent interest, and now over two-thirds pays only two per cent.

Thus, measured by the yearly debt burden each American in 1865 carried about twenty-four times as much as he does today.

Wind of Fame.

"Press agents are all very well," said Alfred Noyes, the English poet, at a picnic luncheon at Nahant; "but a press agent won't advance you to success unless you have the real qualities of success within you."

The eyes of the poet twinkled, and he resumed:

"Before the press agent blows the trumpet of fame for you, you yourself have got to raise the wind."

Cover Crops.

Kentucky is a land largely made up of rolling, hilly, or even mountainous areas with most of its soil of a clay formation. These two conditions present a most favorable combination for washing and in nearly every part of the state one becomes impressed with the terrible damage done annually by the gullying of sloping areas caused by heavy rains. Corn is Kentucky's principal crop, especially from the standpoint of area planted, and this crop after the thorough loosening of the soil from cultivation during the summer leaves the ground in perfect condition for washing and subsequent gullying. The most effective way of preventing this great damage to our farms is by never leaving these cultivated areas open to the heavy rains of fall and winter, this being prevented by providing some growing crop to cover the ground during these seasons.

The plant most in favor as a cover crop in this state is rye. This is because of the relative cheapness of seed, the lateness at which rye can be sown, the comparative certainty of getting a stand, its degree of immunity to winter freezing, and the pasture which the crop furnishes before plowing under preparatory to the next year's crop.

Rye as a cover crop may be sown in the corn field any time from September 15th to October 15th, the earlier seeding often furnishing good late fall and winter pasture. It would be an excellent practice if each farmer would annually sow enough rye as a regular crop to provide sufficient seed for planting all areas on the farm which otherwise would be left naked during the winter.

Doubtless the only shortcoming of rye as a cover crop is that it does not feed upon nitrogen taken directly from the air and hence adds more of this valuable element of plant food to the soil. We must look to the so-called leguminous plants to perform this function. Hairy, or winter vetch perhaps best supplements this need, and can be successfully grown with rye by reducing the quantity of rye seed and sowing during September, preferably not later than the 15th of that month. Rye and vetch after mixing can be sown from the grain drill, in which case from two to three pecks of rye and about 20 pounds of vetch per acre should be used. Winter vetch has a slim stem, leaflets somewhat resembling those of alfalfa in shape, and blue clustering blossom which appear shortly before the ripening of the rye. Its reclining nature makes the rye of great benefit in its support for which its tendrils the vetch climbs nearly to the full height of the rye. The feeding value of vetch is excellent and more Kentucky farmers should test its merit as a cover crop, with rye.

H. HENDRICK,
Department of Agronomy, Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station.

The Small Sheep Flock.

Sheep raising on a small scale is almost universally profitable on almost every farm, but when more than a small flock is kept quite a different proposition is involved, says Progressive Farmer. With a small flock no special pastures are required, and they can be housed in buildings used for the other stock without crowding and require little feed and practically no special attention. When a larger flock is kept two or more pastures should be maintained ample houses for keeping dry without crowding provided an abundance of suitable feed supply. We advise the beginner in this line of stock raising to procure the best native ewes obtainable in his locality and then buy a pure bred ram and with this small flock learn the business thoroughly before attempting to raise sheep in large numbers.

What will be your children's recollection of a home—a house you owned or a house you rented

No man is too poor to build as long as he is spending money for some luxury he could deny himself.

Think over all the investments of which you have heard. How many wh ohave invested in homes have lost their money?

No doubt the lot on which you live will be worth more in a few years than it is now, but it will be worth it to the landlord, not you.

NOT PEPPERMINT BUT STRONG

Illiterate Man Was Not to Be Convinced That He Had Really Smelt Nothing.

At a certain northern Chautauqua gathering last summer a lecturer, at the opening of his address, came to the front of the platform and took a small vial from his pocket.

"My friends," he said, "before I begin my address, I wish to test the ventilation of this auditorium. I am going to pour out this oil of peppermint. When the odor reaches you, raise your hands, so that I may see how rapidly it travels."

He emptied the vial, and almost instantly several hands on the front benches went up; then farther back the hands began to go up by the dozens, until at last the people in the last seats caught the odor, and raised their hands.

The lecturer thanked his auditors, and went on with his address. When he had almost finished, and was speaking of the effect of the imagination on our senses, he paused, and said with a smile that it was only clear water he had poured out of his vial.

The audience had been caught so neatly that even those who had held up their hands joined in the laugh. But one illiterate fellow, whose hand had gone up more promptly and emphatically than any other, did not quite understand.

"What they laughin' at?" he asked, audibly, of the man sitting beside him.

"Why," explained the man, "you did not smell peppermint at all; it was only imagination."

"Well," said the other, "I knowed it was somethin' that smelled mighty strong."—Youth's Companion.

LITTLE KNOWN OF HEREDITY

Much Talk on the Subject, But World Still Awaits a Satisfactory Explanation.

There are few subjects on which so much "scientific" nonsense is talked and written as on heredity. Not very much is known of it as regards plants, less of animals, and almost nothing as regards humanity, writes H. Fielding-Hall in the Atlantic. To read books on heredity, especially those of the Eugenic society, is to read a mass of suppositions and hazardous inductions where most of the facts are negative, and only the exceptions are positive. The very meaning of "hereditary" is not understood. If any quality is truly hereditary, then it is always hereditary. It never occurs except as the results of heredity, and it is constant, that is to say, it invariably follows. But there is no quality of which this can be said. That genius is not hereditary is known. Even talent is not. Nor is any aptitude. A lawyer's son more often wants to be a soldier or an artist than a lawyer, notwithstanding the environment, and it is so with most professions. The exceptions seem to be due to training and influence, not to any hereditary transmission. A superficial likeness to parents seems hereditary, but that is all that we can assert, and that outward likeness by no means infers an inward likeness. There is nothing to attribute to heredity what is due to training or want of training. It excuses supineness in governments and professions.

Without Food Twenty-eight Days.

A remarkable feat of involuntary fasting was performed 12 years ago by a corporal in a regiment of French colonial infantry. On his way to work one morning a man heard cries proceeding from a disused mine, near Brest. At the bottom of an excavation nearly 100 feet deep Corporal Andre Desrats was found in so weak a condition that he could hardly articulate a word. When he recovered his rescuers learned that, after accidentally falling into the mine, Desrats had been imprisoned for twenty-eight days without anything to eat or drink. But a pig can beat a man. Dr. W. B. Carpenter in his Manual of Physiology records that a pig weighing 160 pounds was entombed by the fall of a portion of the chalk cliffs at Dover. It was dug out 160 days later, and found to be still alive, but reduced in weight to 40 pounds.

Of Course.

A New York dramatic writer tells of an actress of great popularity who is just beginning to be obsessed with the notion that the public holds her to be older than she really is.

The writer was assigned to interview this player. He wished to obtain her views with reference to the state of the drama, a topic whereon the actress did not seem particularly anxious to decant.

"It does not seem to me," gently suggested the interviewer, with a smile, "that I am really ascertaining your opinion. You ought to be frank, since your eyes are gray and—"

"Prematurely so, my dear boy, prematurely so," the actress hastened to assure him.—Judge.

Walking at Billiards.

"I figure out," said one of the billiard experts playing in the championship games, "that I walk three miles when I play 400 points. Of course, sometimes I do less than that, provided my average runs by nursing are larger. When I can keep the balls closely together for a good run, that lessens the distance I have to walk."

This cue artist said he once made 100 points and did not circle the table half a dozen times. More amazing still was the assertion that he had seen the late Jacob Schaefer run 150 points without going even once entirely around the table.

One of the finest peaches it has been our pleasure to see or eat was one grown in the orchard of Jack Pace. His son, Houston, presented us with one that weighed eight and one-half ounces and measured nine and one-half inches and it certainly did eat good.—Hardin Enterprise.

A record for the sale of a yearling mule was made at the Danville fair last week when James H. Woods, of near Stanford, sold to Gentry & Thompson, of Lexington, a yearling mule for $265. Mr. Woods refused $150 for a full sister to her, a suckling colt.—Stanford Interior-Journal.

About half of the ninety men summoned from Madison county for jury service in the trial of Red Tom Davidson swore they had neither read nor discussed the trials of these noted feudists. That's strange with all the modern mail service of that county, and besides two former juries have served, the members of which represented every section of the county.—Winchester Democrat.

Local sportsmen are wearing "the smile that won't come off," and every day the smile keeps widening, as reports keep coming in from all sections of the State about the exceptionally large crop of quail this year. It is said by those who have been out to the "hunting grounds" that the call of the bob white can be heard on every side, and that the supply of the game is great this season. The reason is said to be the continued hot, dry weather.—Danville Messenger.

Providence is now up against the worst ice famine it has ever known since artificial ice came into use. The ice plants water supply is exhausted and it has closed down. The plants at neighboring towns are taxed to the full capacity, and no regular shipments can be had from any of these points. Small quantities of ice are being shipped in from Clay, Evansville, Henderson and other places, but consumers have no assurances whatever of being able to get a continuous supply. —Providence Enterprise.

R. W. Kline, teacher at Pond Lick, has demonstrated that a man can teach domestic science. Mr. Kline has his students read about bread-making in class, using a bulletin sometimes instead of a reader, and then go home and bake bread by the recipe and bring samples to school. Lin Martin, the official school painter, of Rowan county, sampled some of this bread and pronounced it the finest he ever ate. The cooking class of Pond Lick recently gave a box supper and let the whole district sample their cooking, and everybody had a taste of the good things prepared under the directions learned at school. Mr. Kline will be worth a fortune to his district if he keeps up these practical things.—Morehead Mountaineer.

Dust On Rural Roads.

The drouth which has been prevailing over a large portion of Kentucky has accentuated the dust nuisance on the country roads. Overland travel in most localities is thereby robbed of much of its attractiveness.

Cities and towns can keep keep down the dust by the application of oil to the dusty streets or by the continuous use of the water wagon. But sprinkling carts are not known on country roads and the practice of oiling the public highways in Kentucky has not made much headway. In future, perhaps, it will become more general, but there is small prospect that it will do so at any early day.

The growth of automobile travel on the rural roads makes the dust problem more serious than ever before. The unpleasantness of a dusty road is not experienced alone by those who travel the thoroughfare, but is impressed very strongly on persons who dwell by the roadside. Flying clouds of dust are quite as annoying in country as in city, and they detract largely from the comfort of rural residents. They also add materially to the cares of the careful housewife.

Dust is not merely a nuisance. It is a menace to health. The menace may not be as great on the country roads as it is in the city streets, but the element of hazard is present wherever the dust may be—and the hazard grows with increasing dust and increasing travel. The time seems to be coming when the dust evil will be almost as serious in the country as in the city, and when measures will have to be adopted for its mitigation. —C.-J.

Here's The Plumb Bob

It's just another proof that Tubular Cream Separators are just up to the minute—miles ahead of anyother. No other machine has it.

What's It For?

It enables you to level the Sharples Dairy Tubular Cream Separator in a minute—quicker than you could find the spirit level you must use to level all other separators. A glance at the plumb bob, hanging there on the back of the Tubular, will always tell you whether the Tubular remains level. In that way you get the very best work out of the Tubular, for all Separators should be kept level to do their best work.

Tubulars have dozens of exclusive fine points and are sold on the level. Bring the wife in. See how simple, perfect and different from others Tubulars are.

WITH A SHOT GUN

Lou Phelps Kills William Zuelli, Blowing The Top of His Head Off.

Lou Phelps shot and killed William Zuelli in his tent at Taylorsport, last Saturday night about 9:30 o'clock, blowing one side of Zuelli's head off with a shot gun. Phelps is a carpenter and has been engaged at work in Delhi for some time, and last Saturday night he was coming to this side of the river in the skiff with Zuelli, his son and his son-in-law, and says that when the skiff was some distance out in the river the Zuelli parties began rocking it in a furious manner, when he asked them to stop, telling them that he could not swim, but they paid no attention to his entreaties, and it was not long until he was thrown into the river, when Zuelli jumped out onto him and began trying to go through his pockets. He succeeded in getting away from Zuelli, and having gotten an oar in his struggle he managed to reach the Kentucky shore. When he got home he changed his clothes and went out in town to borrow a gun which he finally got from one of his neighbors, when he went to the tent in which the Zuelis resided and found them seated at the table eating supper. Phelps says when he reached the tent his heart failed him, but when he heard the old man say, "if we had kept him under the water a little longer I would have got the bottle of whisky he had if nothing else," this so enraged him that he raised his gun, saying, "you would would you?" and as Zuelli looked around he fired at very close range, the load of shot taking effect in one side of the face, tearing it almost from the neck. It is probable that Phelps would have killed the other two men had they not taken the gun from him. After being disarmed Phelps went to L. H. Sprague's and told him what he had done and requested him to telephone Sheriff Hume to come after him. Mr. Sprague complied with the request, and the Sheriff summoned J. M. Eddins to accompany him and they hastened to the scene of the tragedy, where they found a considerable crowd of excited people, Phelps appearing to be the most composed individual among them. It was between one and two o'clock Sunday morning when the officer returned with his prisoner and lodged him in jail.

The two men seated at the table with Zuelli at the time he was shot say that they were talking about the episode in the river when the old man remarked, "I had a hard time to keep Phelps from drowning," but this Phelps stoutly denies.

Coroner Murat was called and held an inquest, and returned a verdict simply stating how Zuelli came to his death, and it is very doubtful if the public is ever thoroughly satisfied as to what occured in the skiff and why Phelps was thrown into the river.

Phelps is a man about 45 years old and has a wife and several children ranging in age from 2 to 21 years of age. Zuelli is somewhere in the fifties and had been occupying a tent in Taylorsport for some time.

If the men ever had any trouble before last Saturday night none of their neighbors knew anything about it.

Taylorsport and vicinity is worked up as never before and the people deplore the tragedy.

Phelp's examining trial will be held next Monday in Burlington.

THE ERLANGER FAIR

Attended by Large Crowd—Plenty of Fine Stock—Fine Exhibits.

Taken as a whole the weather last week was decidedly favorable to the Erlanger fair and the attendance was large, especially on Friday and Saturday when the crowds were about as large as could be accommodated.

Considerable good stock was shown, among the exhibitors being the old timers Brock, Best, Crenshaw, Biggers and Gateskill with numerous local men who had quite a number of handsome animals in the several rings, and who pulled down many of the good prizes.

The half mile track was in fine condition and the racing each afternoon was exciting, many of the finishes being very close. The betting on these events was spirited but no very large sums changed hands on any of the results.

All manner of games for the amusement of those who like to invest in chances were on the grounds and there seemed to be plenty of money to invest in them with the nerve to back it, and a merry crowd surrounded these games at all times.

"Were all medicines as meritorious as Chamberlain's Cholera, Colic and Diarrhoea Remedy the world would be much better off and the percentage of suffering greatly decreased," writes Lindsay Scott, of Temple, Ind. For sale by J. W. Berkshire and Son and E. R. Kelly.

Remember Jack Edding' auto will be in the passenger business again this week, making schedule trips between Burlington and the Florence fair.

You can have more fun in youth by spending all your money then, but you can have more comfort in age by building you a home in youth.

Lassing to Resign.

When in Burlington during the last term of the Boone circuit court Appellate Judge John M. Lassing made known to several of his friends his intention to resign as one of the Judges of the Court of Appeals, his resignation to be tendered when that court convenes in September. He has several years yet to serve, but he has not been in robust health for some time, besides he has numerous business interests that demand his attention, which conditions have caused him to decide upon the step he will take. Judge Lassing's work on the bench has resulted in opinions in several of the most important cases that have come before that tribunal since he became a member thereof, and in every instance these opinions have been heartily endorsed by the State over by both the public and the members of the bar. He has made a painstaking, industrious judge, dispensing justice without fear or favor. As yet no one has been suggested as Judge Lassing's probable successor.

GOOD ROADS.

[M. J. CROUCH]

At the conclusion of our previous article on this subject, we put the question: "Shall we not say that back of this proposition is the demand of the mass of the intelligent citizenship of Boone county?"

This proposition of good roads is of more vital importance to us than anyother business proposition that is or could come before us.

This importance is being recognized as never before all over this United States, not only by individuals but communities, counties, States and the national government. Recognizing beyond a doubt that good roads are not only desirable but absolutely necessary for our well being, our future progress, prosperity and happiness, and then we are ready to discuss how we may best obtain them. We, as individuals as well as communities or counties are not willing to pay the price until we really and sincerely desire these things. This is true of any commodity or improvement as well as good roads—free pikes, a proper road system supported by taxation. When our development, our education or progress has reached this point, we demand these things. That all improvements, material or moral or intellectual cost a certain effort or price, when we have reached this point to make the effort to pay the price the victory is already won. We should know and do know that it costs much money to build and maintain churches and schools, but we are willing to pay the price for we have been educated to appreciate their importance, and so no intelligent, civilized county is without them any more than a flat class city would do without well paved streets and pavements. We are bound to admit that these things and many others we could name mark our progress toward a higher civilization, toward greater attainments.

Now, free pikes is our slogan because it is the first step in an effort to obtain good roads. It not only means that we must make the roads that we now have free roads, but we are to build good roads all over the county, every thoroughfare where ever the travel or interest of the public may demand them. We believe in free pikes because we believe the public should own our public roads. Besides, we admit that wherever we find good roads they are owned by the county, state or nation and not by private individuals who put a pole across the public highways. These obstructions to progress and travel mark that county as surely as Cain was marked and branded a murderer. Whoever saw Cain knew that God had marked him thus, so whoever sees a pole across the public highway knows surely, knows for a certainty that county is nonprogressive—it has the curse and mark of Cain upon its brow.

One by one our neighbor counties have removed this brand and not only have free pikes, free roads but better roads than we. Let any one who doubts travel through Central Kentucky in fact most anywhere the natural conditions will permit and he will find free roads and better roads maintained by a proper road tax and working system. But enough for the present. We do not wish nor do we intend to prolong this discussion. What we do wish now is to explain our part in filling the petition of five hundred and thirty-five legal voters of Boone county for a vote on free pikes and good roads. I have taken the initiative in this effort at the earnest request of many good friends of this movement, who, recognizing my efforts in the past for good roads, felt that I should do this work now. So far I feel that I have done my part and in concluding I appeal to every intelligent, public spirited, good citizen of this county to come forward and do his part for good roads and the beginning of a better era—an era of progress and greater prosperity.

You should spend at the fair at Florence this week at least two days. It is a great place at which to meet old acquaintances and form new ones. It is somewhat of a home-coming for Boone county people who have cast their lots in distant territory and are always glad to meet old acquaintances for which purpose they journey to the Boone fair.

If your living in a house made the house more valuable, if the house were yours you would reap the profit.

SUGAR PUT TO VARIOUS USES

In Much Demand for the Industries, and in Processes That Would Be Suspected by Few.

If all the sugar that is eaten in the course of a year were to be equally divided, every person in the world would have at least twenty pounds. But, besides being used as food, sugar has many industrial uses. It is the cheapest form of a chemically pure carbohydrate, and is often used in place of starch, dextrin, or glucose.

Sugar is frequently put in compounds for removing and preventing boiler scale. It is used in the manufacture of shoeblacking, transparent soap, copying ink, and ink rollers for printing presses. Certain explosives contain from six to forty per cent. of it. It is employed in dying establishments, by tanneries for "filling" leather, and in a large number of other industries.

Sugar has a hardening and strengthening action in mortar. The mortar used to rebuild the Museum of Natural History in Berlin consisted of one part lime, one part sand and two parts sugar. Even a very small quantity, however, as little as one-quarter of one per cent., exerts a very harmful effect on cement.—Youth's Companion.

PROBABLY TOUCHED THE SPOT

Episcopal Blessing Seemed to Indicate That the Toddy Was Not at All Unwelcome.

In the course of those official goings about which are called visitations, Bishop A. M. Randolph of Virginia once found himself in a remote country parish. He was the guest as usual of a senior warden, and he arrived upon a day of rain, and sleet, and nipping winds. In the absence of her husband about the week-day business of bread-winning, the good lady of the house showed the bishop to his room, where a fire burned brightly, and then debated whether she should send him up a hot toddy. She felt in her motherly soul that after such a drive a man of the bishop's age should have a hot toddy, but she did not know whether this particular bishop might not be a teetotaler.

Finally her hospitable instincts overcame her scuples. She mixed the toddy. But she dared not take it up to the bishop herself. She called her little daughter, aged eight, coached the child in a proper little speech, handed her the glass, and told her to take it carefully to the bishop's door, knock, and wait for results.

The little girl went, and very soon came back—without the toddy.

"What did the bishop say?" asked the anxious mother.

"I knocked on the door," replied the messenger, "and he opened it real quick and reached out his hand and said, 'Bless you, my child.'"—New York Evening Post.

Royal Widow's Woes.

Poor old Francis Joseph, emperor of Austria, is again called upon to use his kindly offices by another distressed lady who desires the approval of the pope to the divorce recently granted to her by the civil courts. The lady is the Archduchess Isabella, who married Prince George of Bavaria, a union that was but for a day. Pius X. has ratified the legal decisions, but has ordered as a penance for the lady that for six months she shall remain retired in the Red Cross convent and minister to the sick. The archduchess finds this prescription of the pope altogether too severe, as she desires to attend the wedding of her cousin, the prince of Croy, with Miss Nancy Leishman, daughter of the United States minister to Berlin. In the meantime Francis Joseph will do what he can to relieve the lady of the discipline inflicted by the church.

How Capital Grows!

Lytham has benefited to the remarkable extent by the growth of its prosperous neighbor, Blackpool, says the London Chronicle. Two centuries ago the sum of £5 was bequeathed for the education of the children of poor inhabitants of Lytham. In course of time the fund grew to nearly £500, and this sum was invested by the trustees of the Lytham charities in a plot of land, which now forms the center of Blackpool. Within the last 50 years the corporation of Blackpool has paid about £100,000 for the freehold rights of small sections of this estate, and it is believed that in course of time the value of the property owned by the charities will reach £500,000.

Civil War Debt.

Civil war means something besides battle. When Lee surrendered at Appomattox each person then living in the United States had on his or her shoulders a federal debt of about $80. Today each inhabitant's share of interest-bearing debt is approximately $10. At the earlier date two-thirds of all the government debt paid six per cent interest, and now over two-thirds pays only two per cent.

Thus, measured by the yearly debt burden each American in 1865 carried about twenty-four times as much as he does today.

Wind of Fame.

"Press agents are all very well," said Alfred Noyes, the English poet, at a picnic luncheon at Nahant; "but a press agent won't advance you to success unless you have the real qualities of success within you."

The eyes of the poet twinkled, and he resumed:

"Before the press agent blows the trumpet of fame for you, you yourself have got to raise the wind."

Cover Crops.

Kentucky is a land largely made up of rolling, hilly, or even mountainous areas with most of its soil of a clay formation. These two conditions present a most favorable combination for washing and in nearly every part of the state one becomes impressed with the terrible damage done annually by the gullying of sloping areas caused by heavy rains. Corn is Kentucky's principal crop, especially from the standpoint of area planted, and this crop after the thorough loosening of the soil from cultivation during the summer leaves the ground in perfect condition for washing and subsequent gullying. The most effective way of preventing this great damage to our farms is by never leaving these cultivated areas open to the heavy rains of fall and winter, this being prevented by providing some growing crop to cover the ground during these seasons.

The plant most in favor as a cover crop in this state is rye. This is because of the relative cheapness of seed, the lateness at which rye can be sown, the comparative certainty of getting a stand, its degree of immunity to winter freezing, and the pasture which the crop furnishes before plowing under preparatory to the next year's crop.

Rye as a cover crop may be sown in the corn field any time from September 15th to October 15th, the earlier seeding often furnishing good late fall and winter pasture. It would be an excellent practice if each farmer would annually sow enough rye as a regular crop to provide sufficient seed for planting all areas on the farm which otherwise would be left naked during the winter.

Doubtless the only shortcoming of rye as a cover crop is that it does not feed upon nitrogen taken directly from the air and hence adds more of this valuable element of plant food to the soil. We must look to the so-called leguminous plants to perform this function. Hairy, or winter vetch perhaps best supplements this need, and can be successfully grown with rye by reducing the quantity of rye seed and sowing during September, preferably not later than the 15th of that month. Rye and vetch after mixing can be sown from the grain drill, in which case from two to three pecks of rye and about 20 pounds of vetch per acre should be used. Winter vetch has a slim stem, leaflets somewhat resembling those of alfalfa in shape, and blue clustering blossom which appear shortly before the ripening of the rye. Its reclining nature makes the rye of great benefit in its support for which its tendrils the vetch climbs nearly to the full height of the rye. The feeding value of vetch is excellent and more Kentucky farmers should test its merit as a cover crop, with rye.

H. B. HENDRICK,
Department of Agronomy, Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station.

The Small Sheep Flock.

Sheep raising on a small scale is almost universally profitable on almost every farm, and when more than a small flock is kept quite a different propsition is involved, says Progressive Farmer. With a small flock no special pastures are required, and they can be housed in buildings used for other stock without crowding and require little feed and practically no special attention When a larger flock is kept two or more pastures should be maintained ample houses for keeping dry without crowding provided an abundance of suitable feed supply. We advise the beginner in this line of stock raising to precure the best native ewes obtainable in his locality and then buy a pure bred ram and with this small flock learn the business thoroughly before attempting to raise sheep in large numbers.

What will be your children's recollection of a home—a house you owned or a house you rented

No man is too poor to build as long as he is spending money for some luxury he could deny himself.

Think over all the investments of which you have heard. How many wh ohave invested in homes have lost their money?

No doubt the lot on which you live will be worth more in a few years than it is now, but it will be worth it to the landlord, not you.

KNIFE FREELY USED

By Chas. Isaacs on Robert Finnell at Big Bone Springs Last Sunday.

Charles Isaacs and Robert Finnell met at Big Bone Springs, last Sunday afternoon and got into a difficulty in which Isaacs used his knife pretty freely on Finnell, stabbing him once and cutting an ugly gash under his left arm, while there are other evidences of the use of the knife on Finnell's person, who it is said knocked Isaacs down after he was cut. Sheriff Hume and wife were spending the day with Mrs. Lizzie Miller, who lives near the grove where the altercation took place, and Mr. Hume was called and took Isaacs into custody and brought him to Burlington and lodged him in jail. It appears that the men had been drinking and an old trouble was revived. Both the parties to the trouble are single men. The wounded man was able to be taken home Sunday afternoon, and at last accounts he was getting along well.

SAW THE FIRST STEAMBOAT

That Went Down The Ohio River Nearly One Hundred Years Ago.

Jacob Strader, colored, said to be 95 years old, was followed to his grave last Tuesday afternoon by a large concourse of his colored friends. In slave times he was the property of the late John C. Riley, of Union neighborhood, and was an estimable, old time negro. The deceased claimed to have seen the first steamboat that went down the Ohio river, he being large enough to plow corn and was so engaged near the river.

ROAD EXHIBIT FOR CO. FAIRS.

Models Will Illustrate Both Good and Bad Thoroughfares.

Frankfort.—An interesting exhibit is being prepared in the State department of roads for the state and county fairs. One part of the exhibit will be a model road built to scale of an inch to the foot for a sixteen foot roadway, 33 feet from ditch to ditch. The model is mounted on a light wagon with a carefully rolled sand foundation show ing a cross section of the road the first course of large stone, the second of small stones and the third of gravel and the surface screenings all roperly rolled and water bound together with the proper slope of the crown. From the wooden frame to the crown the road is built exactly as a first class pike should be built. Several photos are also shown one of children going to school over an old fashioned knee deep mud roads and its companion exhibits children going to school overt he same road improved. A striking pair of pictures presents a physician buggy stalled in the mud and a hearse also mired and they bear the legend that the physician was delayed, the patient died and the funeral halted by the mire.—Ex.

What More Does Women Want?

An exchange says: 'A man can't sell his house and lot without his wife's consent, but he must pay her bills whatever they are. If he deserts she can jug him; if she deserts him he has to take his medicine. If he jilts her she can mulct him for breach of promise; if she jilts him le gets the laugh. If he dies she gets the property; if she dies he pays the funeral bill. If they whips her he gets the whipping post. If she hits him with a skillet the world concludes he deserves it. And still the women want their rights.

New Book Contract.

An important measure to come before the next legislature will be the book contract to be made. The present contract with the American Book Co., which was put over on us by the 1908 session of the legislature and August Wilson, expires in 1914 and the next Assembly will have an opportunity to make a better one. The question of books for the children of our state is a very important one and every one is vitally interested in getting a better contract. The state of Indiana prints her own books and furnishes them to the citizens at cost.—Owen Democrat.

Belleview 6, Burlington 4.

Burlington and Belleview ball teams met again last Monday on the former's grounds with the usual result, score 6 to 4 in favor of Belleview, the game being won by a great 9th inning rally started by Hubert Brady and kept going by Deck and Louden. There was some hard hitting on both sides, Belleview getting a double and a tripple while Burlington got a double tripple and home run. Burlington made 10 hits and Belleview nine. Rogers struck out 11, Dix nine and Huey 3. Several are claiming that nine Boone county men can be got together who can beat Belleview in a series, but on that proposition the Recorder is from Missouri.

A Watermelon Feast.

W. T. Stott and Edgar C. Riley pooled watermelons and had a big load in town at an early hour last Monday. The melons were knifed about noon, and as the red, luscious interiors were revealed the crowd began collecting for the onslaught which was very spirited until everybody's appetite was satisfied. There was plenty for every person and if anyone was not served it was his own fault. It was a much appreciated treat and the biggest watermelon cutting in the history of the town.

W. D. Cropper has discovered the cause of a noise that has been bothering him at the bank at night for some time. It was a mouse in a desk drawer which contained a few hickory nuts. He is sleeping better at nights now.

An order was entered in the county court last Monday directing that a vote be taken at the regular election in November to ascertain if the county is "in favor of Free Turnpikes and Gravel Roads."

When a man who is in the habit of working steadily six days in the week and fifty-two weeks in the year takes a day off some one is sure to ask him if he is sick.

Gaines Wingate and Mr. Caivert, of Petersburg, were in Burlington a short time late Monday afternoon. They came up in Mr. Wingate's auto.

Rev Edgar D. Jones, of Bloomington, Ill., will preach at the Bullittsville Christian church next Sunday morning. Come out to hear him.

GOOD ROADS MEETING.

Vote to be Taken on Free Turnpikes and Gravel Roads.

A Problem in Which the People of Boone County Are Very Much Concerned.

The Good Roads meeting held at the court house last Monday afternoon was well attended, persons being present from about every neighborhood in the county.

The meeting was called to order by Dr. M. J. Crouch, of Union, who was elected and presided as permanent chairman. The meeting was addressed by several persons who set forth the great advantages to be derived by the county having good roads and altogether it was a decidedly harmonious gathering of men determined to bring the road question to the front in this county. The plan is to purchase and make free all the toll roads in the county and then construct free turnpikes as rapidly as circumstances will justify.

The matter will be pretty thoroughly discussed between now and the election in November at which the vote will be taken on the question as to whether the county is in favor of free turnpikes and gravel roads.

Those who are behind the proposition are very much pleased with the interest that is being manifested and believe the proposition will carry by a handsome majority.

EXCHANGE ECHOES.

The only difference between committing suicide and starting something in Breathitt county is the way the mourners feel about it.—Paducah Sun.

One speaker at the Camden barbecue urged farmers to make their profession their only vocation. In this the speaker was right. One great trouble in Kentucky is the fact that so many farmers farm in town.—Danville Messenger.

The old system of building roads is no good in this day and generation. It has been depended upon ever since Kentucky was admitted into the union, and yet our public roads are fifty years behind what they should be to-day.—Mayfield Messenger.

The average daily newspaper reporter, in writing up a murder or suicide, always finds the victim in "a pool of blood." Just a pint of two of the vital fluid does not suffice. There must always be nearly enough to swim in.—Hartford Herald.

According to the Dawson Springs Tribune, the largest crowd of visitors at the popular health resort for the past several weeks is there at present, it being estimated that fully 2,000 are registered at the hotels and boarding houses of the town.—Madisonville Hustler.

Mr. J. H. Soyster and son, of near Springdale, have a wonderful cantaloupe patch this year. Off of 750 hills, less than an acre, they have been selling $50 worth of the luscious melons each month for the past two and a half months. They will get another $50 worth before frost.—Maysville Public Ledger.

The recent State primary election brought out a big lot of new made democrats. In Meade county, for instance, 347 more votes were polled than were given for Wilson for President. In Todd county there were 500 more. Many other counties will doubtless show an increased list of converts. How many of them will stick through the November election?—Georgetown Times.

The time is fast approaching when the people of Pulaski will realize the advantages we have here. While the land is not easily cultivated nor as productive as in some places, it is cultivated and the results are fairly good, and could be made much better by applying more of the improved methods of farming. The timber is practically gone and farming and stock raising will have to be depended upon for a living. We have a large county, and it contains thousands of acres of land, room for a great many more people, and yet our people leave in large numbers every year. Why not remain here and improve what we have? Our land, our stock, and especially our roads, should be improved, and this requires time, patience and hard work, but the reward that awaits us, if we do our duty will recompense us tenfold.—Somerset Journal.

PESTS OF SHADE TREE

Proper Protection Is Problem of Much Importance.

Sudden Losses Are Frequently Caused by Overwhelming Attacks of Leaf-Eating Insects—Keep Pests In Subjection.

(By S. A. FORBES.)

The protection of the shade trees and ornamental shrubs of our city parks against insects has been for several years a problem of increasing importance. Many of the most desirable trees and shrubs are liable to show destruction by obscure insect pests little understood, if at all, by those immediately concerned.

Trees which have grown for years becoming more attractive, more valuable and more highly valued year by year, begin to weaken and decay, and the owner does not know why. This is often due to borers or the scale insects or beetles, the presence of which has not been detected or suspected, but which injuries might have been prevented if the facts had been known in time. More sudden losses are caused by overwhelming attacks of leaf-eating insects, which, although conspicuous, are not dealt with because proper measures of procedure are not known.

But, of late years, a great work has been accomplished along this line through proper experiments and observations. Careful examinations are being made of the affected trees and shrubs and the life history of the insects causing the injuries is being studied deeply. This is in order that authorities in control of parks, boulevards and streets, and owners of lawns and other private premises may become posted on the habits and characteristics of the pests, and know how to combat them.

Take, for instance, the elm tree. The spraying of large elms is, of course, a difficult and expensive operation, and the canker-worms, which cause great injury to these trees, are less susceptible to arsenical poisons than many other insects. A cheap and efficient method of protecting the tree is the preparation of adhesive preparations, for trapping the insects which creep up or down the trunks of the trees.

When the elm caterpillars are full grown they leave the tree to pupate in the earth, and the female moth emerging, being wholly without wings, can only reach the tree to lay her eggs by climbing up the trunk. If this is encircled at the proper time by a sticky band impassable by her or by young worms just emerging from the egg, the tree is virtually secure against canker-worm injury.

The sticky substance may be applied directly to the bark as a deterrent against the attack of borers, or may be used on bands of paper, tin, or strawboard. For the elm leaf-beetle a trough shaped band, the inside of which is smeared with the sticky material, entraps great numbers of the descending larvae. Used in connection with spraying arsenate of lead on the leaves, it affords a very satisfactory means of keeping the elm pests in subjection.

Trap for Elm Leaf-Beetle, Made of Tin—Lower Edge Should Be Secured About the Tree and Crevices Filled in to Prevent Larvae Passing Through.

Use for Cull Potatoes.

When potatoes come in, use the small ones that are of the size of marbles for the hens and chicks. Cook them and throw them into the poultry yard, and no preparation will be necessary, as the chicks can easily pick them to pieces. It is economical to use potatoes in this manner, those that are usually unsalable can be converted into eggs and assist in adding to the profit from the farm.

Cowpeas in Corn.

Every farmer should consider the sowing of cowpeas in his corn. The cowpeas, besides enriching the soil with nitrogen, will furnish good winter pasturage, and if the corn is cut for silage the cowpeas will help balance the ration. About the best way to sow the cowpeas is to drill them in between the rows of the corn at the last cultivation of same.

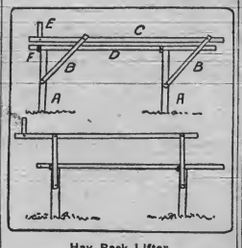
GOAT'S MILK IS EXCELLENT

Nothing Better for Children, as It Is Almost Entirely Free From Dreaded Tuberculosis.

The common milk goat can be kept by the families who cannot afford to keep a cow and as the milk of the goat is highly nutritious it is an excellent substitute for the cow's milk. For children there is nothing better and it is a well-known fact that it is almost entirely free from tuberculosis.

But, answering a question of a correspondent as to whether it is profitable to keep common goats on the farm for the milking purposes, we should say that as a general rule it is not.

Goats require the proper feed just the same as other animals if they are expected to give large quantities of milk and unless one lives near a large city where goat's milk can be sold to hospitals and rich private patients of physicians, it cannot be disposed of to advantage.



Common goats are cheap to begin with; they cost little if a small flock is kept on a large farm, as they can pick up a pretty fair living by browsing on the place.

On the other hand, the odor from the bucks is intolerable to most people. Goats are difficult to confine within bounds as they will climb fences of almost any height, and their favorite sunning place is the top of the barn roof. Altogether, we should say that the common milk goat is entirely out of place on the average farm. Used to supply milk, for special purposes or by people who are unable to keep a cow, they are more or less valuable.

USEFUL AS HAY RACK LIFTER

Arkansas Farmer Has Automatic Unloader for Heavy Wagon Bodies—How It Is Constructed.

I have an automatic unloader for heavy hay racks and other wagon bodies that any one can operate who knows how to drive a team, writes F. Hathaway of Fort Smith, Ark., in the Hay Rack Lifter.

Farmers' Mail and Breeze. Figure 1 shows one section of the frame as it appears before the unloading, while Fig. 2 shows the position of the frame with the rack on it. The posts A are 4 by 4's set firmly into the ground. These posts should be set about 6½ feet apart crosswise.

The length and height of the frames depend upon the racks used, BB are the lifting braces, which must be well made and securely bolted to the posts, yet not so tight as to hinder them from moving freely in the loading or unloading of rack. The pieces C are 2 by 6s bolted to the lifting braces. At their forward ends two short pieces of 2 by 4s (E) are bolted that strike against the rack as it is being driven between the frames, thus bringing up the lifting frames and raising the rack off the wagon.

Two crosspieces of 2 by 4s (D) are bolted lengthwise to the post to give the frames rigidity. Two hooks (F) are bolted at the forward end of D to stop the forward movement of the lifting frame. These are placed a little past the center so as to lock the frame while up. Two pawls notched at one end are bolted underneath the rack frame with the notched ends against the rear bolster of the wagon. This prevents the rack slipping back as it rises from the wagon.

Silage Too Bulky for Swine.

Swine raisers are advised against feeding young swine extensively on silage, in a recent bulletin from the Iowa station. It is too fibrous and low in digestible nutrients to prove satisfactory for growing and feathering swine.

The hog has a digestive apparatus suited largely to concentrated feeds. Old sows will eat some silage; however, if fed to them it should constitute only a small portion of their ration.

Shallow Garden Cultivating.

Continue to cultivate all the vegetables in the garden frequently and shallow. This is especially true of the tomatoes. They cannot be expected to continue to bear fruit if this essential is not properly taken care of. Frequent cultivation in addition to the prolongation of the bearing period of the tomato tends to lessen the damage due to the blossom end rot of this fruit. Keep this good work going by all means.

Giving Hogs a Bath.

Kansas Agricultural College says: Few things retard the growth of a hog so much as lice. Years of experience have shown that the best remedy for destroying the lice and fleas is dipping in chemical solutions. Dipping also keeps the skin of the animal in a healthy condition and thereby aids growth. Because of cheapness in first cost and lasting qualities, most dipping vats are now built of concrete.

A Commendable Suggestion.

State Senator Huffaker, of Louisville, makes a good suggestion in urging that Kentucky follow the example of Missouri and devote a day or two ro road making.

Though little might be accomplished in the way of improvement, Mr. Huffaker believes the moral effect of such a demonstration would be good in that it might influence the Legislature to more favorable consideration of the good roads bills which will be offered in that body this winter.

Any movement which promises any substantial results in the direction of highway betterment is commendable. Kentucky has more than 53,000 miles of public roads and there are very few of them improved or otherwise, upon which some work could not be done to advantage. There may be a few roads which are in perfect condition, but there are not many such. With a general turnout of citizens who are concerned in the highways and who are sufficient ly public spirited to assist energetically in the enterprise Kentucky should be able to do quite as well as Missouri has done, and, if reports be true, that State has no cause to be ashamed of what was accomplished during the two good road days.

Citizens of three counties in Jackson's Purchase already have engaged to donate two days' work on a forty mile stretch of highway. Why cannot the citizens of other counties thus combine their efforts to put some of their main traveled thoroughfares in order? At least some benefit would be derived from such an undertaking and it would unquestionably strengthen the good roads cause.—C.-J.

Many men havn't the money to build only because they have not the courrage to save.

EGGS FROM THE FARM

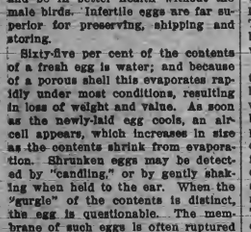
Should Be Gathered Often and Kept in Dry Place.

In Handling, Marketing and Shipping They Should Not Be Exposed to Draughts and Should Be Properly Protected.

(By N. E. CHAPMAN.)

The common causes of loss may be classed under several heads: Small eggs, dirty eggs, breakage, shrunken and rotten eggs, moldy and flavored eggs. Eggs must weigh two ounces or over to be classed as No. 1. Lighter eggs should be consumed on the farm, rather than be sold at a reduced price. Like eggs too small, eggs abnormally large or misshaped should be used at home, for such will be easily crushed in the case, and are always classed as "seconds."

About five eggs out of each hundred marketed are classed as "dirties." These are stained, smeared, muddy, or covered with filth. The odor of whatever soils the egg will soon penetrate the shell and flavor the contents. Market eggs should never be washed, as they take odors more rapidly and soon are stale. Eggs may be washed, however, for use at home. Eggs carried to market in bran are generally classed as "dirties." The bran adheres to the shell, and is difficult to remove.



Out of Every Dozen Eggs That Leave the Farm, but Ten Are Fit to Be Delivered to Customer.

It is estimated that eight per cent of the eggs are broken in moving from producer to consumer. Checked, dented or leaking eggs soon sour, and must be marketed at greatly reduced prices. If checked or broken on the way to market, they should be taken home for use in the family.

Eggs should be gathered often and kept in a cool, dry place until the first opportunity for marketing. Broody hens should be taken from the nests at once, and confined by themselves, unless needed for hatching purposes. After the hatching season is over, all roosters should be sold or confined, and not allowed to run with the laying flock during the summer. Hens will lay more eggs, and be in better health without the male birds. Infertile eggs are far superior for preserving, shipping and storing.

Sixty-five per cent of the contents of a fresh egg is water; and because of a porous shell this evaporates rapidly under most conditions, resulting in loss of weight and value. As soon as the newly-laid egg cools, an air-cell appears, which increases in size as the contents shrink from evaporation. Shrunken eggs may be detected by "candling," or by gently shaking when held to the ear. When the "gurgle" of the contents is distinct, the egg is questionable. The membrane of such eggs is often ruptured in handling and shipping, resulting in "frothy" eggs, of poor quality. In the summer, eggs should receive the same care and consideration as sweet milk and cream, and be marketed daily, if possible. They should not be exposed to draughts of warm air, and should be protected from the rays of the sun and moisture, in handling, marketing and shipping.

Have Only Uniform, Standard-Bred, Laying Stock.

Moisture is the main cause of rotten eggs. Nests on the ground or in wet straw, together with damp cellars and moist "fillers" in egg cases, are mainly responsible for this condition. A fresh egg will absorb odors as rapidly as fresh milk. Mustiness or moldy growth in egg-cases or fillers will taint the egg and lower its quality. Eggs should not be stored in musty cellars, or in rooms with fruit, vegetables or fish. The chickens should never be allowed to drink filthy water, be fed musty grain or strong-flavored vegetables, as onions and garlic, nor given access to decaying meat or substances that will flavor the product and impair its quality.

Cutting Cowpeas.

Cowpeas may be cut with the mower, and after getting at least a full day's sun the vines are raked up and generally lie another day in the windrow. They are then bunched up in small bunches and after another day or two put into larger bunches and let stand as long as weather permits, when they are drawn to the barn.

SPRAY OUTFIT HELPS

Equipment Necessary Depends on Work to Be Done.

General Purpose Pump Should Be Made of Brass to Prevent Corroding by Copper Sulphate Used in Bordeaux Mixture.

(By H. GARMAN.)

The kind of a spraying outfit to get depends entirely on the kind of spraying to be done and the extent of the work proposed. If one has a few rose bushes or tomato plants about a dwelling, or even a few small fruit trees, he can get along with a small hand pump known as a bucket pump. With a little extra hose and a pole, or a bamboo rod, with which to elevate the nozzle, it is possible to spray trees eight or more feet in height with such an outfit. Grape vines can be sprayed very well with a bucket pump, provided there are not many of them. If there are many vines to spray a knapsack sprayer may be best. This is a very convenient outfit for spraying tobacco, potatoes and other low-growing plants, which from the manner of their cultivation, it is not practicable to go among with a team and wagon.

For extensive spraying, it is well to secure a strong pump attached to a barrel or tank that can be hauled about in a cart or wagon. Hand pumps so attached are used for small orchards and other plants grown in a moderate way, but power pumps are necessary for extensive spraying and for that required by tall trees.

A man engaged in fruit growing or potato growing, as a business, ought to have a power sprayer of some sort, either operated by the wheel of the vehicle carrying the outfit, as in the compressed-air sprayers, or by a gasoline motor.

A general purpose spray pump should be made of brass so that it will not be corroded by the copper sulphate used in bordeaux mixture. Nozzles, too, should be made of brass, and ought to be constructed so that they can be quickly cleaned of solid particles that may lodge in the outlet. The pump will last longer and give better service if washed out with clear water whenever done using them.

Hose should be of the best. For trees it is well to have a sufficient length so that the nozzle can be elevated on the end of a pole among the branches. The precise length will depend upon the size of the trees. For orchard work a length of 10 to 15 feet will serve when the pump is operated from a wagon bed. For shade trees of large size it may be necessary to have 50 feet or more. The hose ought always to be detached, drained and hung up in a cool place after using. A cellar is as good place as any that is commonly available.

$150,000 PAID FOR HORSE

Government of Argentina Buys Craganour, Which Was Disqualified in Recent English Derby.

The sum of $150,000 was paid recently by the government of Argentina for the horse Craganour, which was first past the winning post in the recent derby race, but was disqualified for bumping. Only on four occasions has the price paid for Craganour, which is to be used for breeding purposes in Argentina, been exceeded in the amount paid for a race horse. These were Ormonde, which was sold for $156,250 to an American sportsman; Cyllene, which went to an English sportsman for $157,500; Diamond Jubilee, sold to an Argentine breeder for $167,500, and Flying Fox, which holds the record for price and was sold to a French sportsman for $196,875.

Corn for Silage.

Corn for silage should be plowed only one way. The corn should be drilled in the row and thinned to one stalk to the foot. A small-sized stalk and ear is much more preferable for silage than the large stalk and ear that usually results where the corn is cultivated for feed.

Milkweeds Poison Sheep.

If sheep are poisoned by milkweeds, and the evidence seems to be fairly conclusive that they are, it is only when there is little else to eat, for sheep do not eat milkweeds under normal conditions.

Place for Drinking Vessels.

Drinking vessels placed in the henhouses should be put on a shelf that is raised at least six inches from the ground, or the fowls will scratch a lot of dirt into the water.

Tuberculosis Among Hogs.

Tuberculosis affects hogs. During 1912 the government inspectors condemned about one million carcasses and parts of carcasses for this disease.

TREAT POTATOES FOR SCAB

Corrosive Sublimate Solution and Bordeaux Mixture Applied to Seed Gave Excellent Results.

At a German experiment station, experiments with potato scab have been carried on for two years.

Corrosive sublimate solution of 0.05 per cent., and Bordeaux mixture of two per cent., both applied to the seed potatoes for 1½ hours, gave excellent and about equal results in the prevention of scab, as was also the case with Bordeaux mixture of two per cent. applied to two lots for three and fourteen hours, respectively, and with two lots treated with four kg. per acre (356 pounds per acre) of sulphur mixed with the soil, one lot having been also thoroughly rubbed with sulphur before planting. A peat mold dressing of 35 cm. depth appeared to give some protection against the development of scab, while a sand dressing of the same depth afforded none. On both the plats treated with soil dressing the next year's crops were found to be healthy.

KILL OUT CANADA THISTLES

Most Practical Way of Getting Rid of Patch is to Cut Off All Leaves Below Surface.

In response to a query as to the best way of getting rid of a patch of Canada thistles the Wallace's Farmer makes the following reply:

Anything which keeps Canada thistle leaves from getting to the sunlight for two or three months during the growing season will give them a severe set-back, and in some cases kill them. Putting a heavy coating of straw on the patch has in some cases proved successful, but in other cases the straw has become disarranged and the thistles have grown up through it. Really, the most practical way of getting rid of a small patch of Canada thistles is to go over it every week and cut off all leaves below the surface of the ground. If a conscientious job of this is done for the summer, the thistles will not bother much the next year, although it is best to keep an eye open for them and cut them off regularly. A careful job must be done, for if the leaves are allowed to grow very long in the sunshine enough energy will be stored up in the roots to hold the pest over for a considerable length of time.

TO KILL TENT CATERPILLARS

Single Spray of Arsenate of Lead When Insects Are Observed Would Stop Depredations.

If a grower is spraying his fruit trees faithfully with arsenate of lead from tent caterpillars, or the tents may be crushed with the gloved hand, when they can be reached, at a time when the caterpillars are inside; or burned by a torch on the end of a pole, twisted out of their place by means of a wire brush, attached to the end of a long pole. These remedies are effectual only when the caterpillars are in their tents, early in the morning, or in stormy wet weather. A single spraying of arsenate of lead, when caterpillars are observed, would probably stop their depredations.

The forest tent caterpillars can be destroyed when they collect in bunches on the trunks of trees. Prune off and destroy the twigs holding the eggs.

Breeding Draft Horses.

The breeding of heavy draft horses is one of the most profitable branches of live stock farming. Few farmers realize the importance of size in a draft horse, when put on the market, either in public or private sale. A horse that weighs less than 1,500 pounds is not considered a draft horse in any of the horse markets of the country, yet the mares kept on the ordinary farms are usually lighter than that. This accounts for the small, scrubby lot of horses that are constantly being put on the market at a loss to the breeder.

Care of Swine.

Two things which should be avoided with swine in cold weather are, first, do not let them sleep in or upon heating manure, because they become warm and then rush into the cold air, frequently contracting colds, coughs or severe pulmonary diseases that are sometimes fatal; second, bed them well in dry quarters where there is no draft of air blowing across them.

SMALL CHANCE OF SOLITUDE

"Wireless," Product of Civilization, Would Soon Pick Up a Modern "Robinson Crusoe."

The relentless march of civilization is responsible for some curious anomalies, but it is difficult to conceive of a more strikingly incongruous fate than is at present overtaking the romantic island of Juan Fernandez, the picturesque and secluded spot famous as the scene of the adventures of "Robinson Crusoe."

The habitual peace of this old-world island of cascades and coral is being sadly disturbed by the sound of hammers and saws. Beneath the picturesque fig trees a workmen's camp has sprung up, where employes of the Chilean government are busily engaged in the erection of a wireless station.

The site chosen is the summit of a hill, 1,000 feet high, called "La Centinela"—and appropriately so named, seeing that the lofty eminence dominates the ocean from southeast to northwest, guarding, sentinel-like, the approach to the Cumberland bay and San Juan Baptista, the island's only port.

The plant will have a working radius of 500 miles, so that ships provided with wireless apparatus could be picked up within 1,000 miles westward of Valparaiso, while ocean wanderers out of reach of the Coquimbo or Talcahuano stations may be communicated with.

Last December the Chilean government disembarked the materials and men for the construction of a concrete building—armed against unwelcome attentions from natives—and the work is now fast nearing completion.

There will be little fear in future of any modern voyager sharing Crusoe's fate!

BEST FOOD FOR THE WOODS

Men Who Know Pin Their Faith to Pancakes With Oatmeal to "Fill in the Chinks."

A woodsman will tell you that he can travel longer on beans and peas than on rice. Because cornmeal pancakes were the chief article of food twice a day a guide once complained bitterly that "cornmeal was no food to travel on in the summer, and it makes a man sick to have it too often." This same guide will develop a surly temper the first day out if his employer has a large supply of soup tablets.

I once heard three experts discuss woods food. Two were remarkable guides. The third, a member of the Canadian geological survey, has, in the last ten years, canoed and climbed mountains from coast to coast and from Lake Superior to Hudson bay.

All agreed that they could not travel on a breakfast of oatmeal alone, and all said that when they wished to do a long, hard morning's work they ate pancakes and "filled in the chinks" with oatmeal.—Outing.

Earring an Ancient Ornament.

A curious instance of the survival and revival of a fashion which originated in the remotest times is the earring. Worn by the kings of Egypt, and extremely popular among the ladies of ancient Rome, it subsequently lost favor until the gay days of the Stuart period, after which it again dropped out, and has now once more regained popularity. The very earliest mention of this form of decoration is to be found in the Book of Genesis. Jacob, it will be remembered, on reaching Bethel buried certain strange idols, among them some earrings belonging to his family. Doubtless these ornaments were regarded purely in a propitiatory light as amulets or talismans, such being still their principal office in the east today. That they are of eastern origin is certain, and among orientals, with the exception of Greeks and Hebrews, it has always been the custom for both sexes to wear them, while frequently only one ear was adorned. Among other races, however, earrings were always worn in pairs, and by the women only.

Poultry.

In the poultry department the successful exhibitors were: Will Missick, Crescent Springs Poultry Co., Simon Oetzel, Harry Riggs, Tanner Bros., Wilson & Riffe, J. H. Aylor, L. E. Tanner, Chas. Carpenter and Martha Williams.

Fair Notes.

The refreshment stands had three good days.

Plenty of water on the ground all the time.

The weather could not have been more favorable.

In the aggregate the attendance was about an average.

The shade on the grounds is growing less as the years pass.

The young people enjoyed every minute of the three days.

Good order prevailed every day and the police had a soft job.

The exhibitors were principally those of the last several years.

The agricultural exhibit was short because of the unfavorable season.

The display of vegetables showed the effects of the unfavorable season.

Best & Co., of Walton, were the largest Boone county premium takers.

The grounds were dry and dusty, but the ring was kept in good condition by frequent sprinkling.

There were no accidents in the ring although two or three horses showed a disposition to run while in the ring.

A tire on a large auto near the amphitheater blew out Saturday afternoon, causing some to think that a shooting scrap was on.

Garnett Riley, of Mississippi, was there every day and enjoyed meeting old acquaintances. He was chaperoned by A. B. Whitlock.

There were one hundred automobiles on the ground on Saturday, and the horses and buggies appeared as numerous as ever.

The Lexington party who had been employed to judge the horses could not attend and did not inform the directors until after the fair began.

Uncle Bert Johnson, 77, of Covington, was on hand early Saturday morning as usual, and never stopped going until he had meet all his rural friends.

Wood Maxwell and Waller Campbell, of Covington, and Jas. Clore, of Newport, took in the show on Saturday and were given the glad hand by a host of friends.

The horse show during the three days was as good as ever seen at the fair, while the mules were more numerous and as good as those shown in any of the past years.

R. S. Bruce, of Liberty, Missouri, and James Clore, of Rushville, Indiana, were among those from a distance who attended the fair and were busy hunting old friends.

Special Premiums.

I will give to the best horse colt $7.00 and second best $3.00; to the best mare colt $7.00 and to the second best $3.00, colts to be of the 1913 get of my horse, Don DeGozee, and the show to be held at the Harvest Home on Sept. 13th, 1913.

A NEW HIGH POWER RIFLE—
The Remington-UMC Slide Action Repeater
GETTING in touch with the shooting fraternity all over the country, as we do, we find a very considerable number of Remington-UMC users who want a Remington-UMC slide action repeater in a high power model—one heavy enough for practically any type of game that is found on this continent.
The answer to this demand is the new Remington-UMC High Power Slide Action Repeating Rifle. During the few months these rifles have been on the market, several hundred of them have been put into use. The testimony of the owners is that they are emphatically a success.
Your Remington-UMC dealer has these repeating rifles in stock or will get you one. Don't buy a high power repeater until you have seen it. It is the gun you want.

Mrs. Legrand Gaines, out on the Petersburg pike, was the guest of Burlington friends two or three days last week.

Garnett Huey, son of R. B. Huey, has gone to Balcove, Oklahoma, where he has a position of Professor of English in Balcove College.

L. H. Sprague, of Taylorsport, and Henry Kottmyer, of Constance, were transacting business in the county seat Thursday of last week.

Misses Katie Kirkpatrick and Emma King, of Riverside, Ohio, spent last Sunday and Monday with the former's mother, Mrs. Lavina Kirkpatrick.

H. B. Fenton, Jr., and wife, of Covington, and Misses Helen Lyons and Bessie Berkshire, of Covington, were Sunday guests of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Berkshire.

Misses Bess Hall and Nellie Trotter, after a week's vacation with the former's parents at this place, returned to their homes in Newport, Monday afternoon.

Noah Clore and wife, who have been ill in Covington for two or three weeks, were brought to the home of their daughter, Mrs. A. L. Nichols near town, last Monday.

Judge John M. Lassing and wife and Lieutenant Walter H. Lassing and wife attended the ball game here last Monday afternoon and took supper at the Boone House.

J. L. Clements, of Erlanger, passed thru Burlington one day the latter part of last week, enroute from the Belleview bottoms with a load of fine watermelons.

Miss Julia Stevenson, of Norwood, Ohio, and nephew, William Stevenson, of Indianapolis, after a visit of a few days with friends in Burlington, have returned to their homes.

Cleveland Snyder, who is a motorman on one of the street car lines in Cincinnati, spent several days last week with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. D. M. Snyder, at this place.

Mrs. William Hedges entertained the following guests last Sunday: Prof. Harrieon, wife and daughter and their son, Raymond and their daughter, Miss Irene and her company, Mr. Elwood Tanner.

After spending several weeks here with relatives and friends Dr. and Mrs. W. O. Rouse have returned to their home in St. Petersburg, Florida. While here Dr. Rouse made a trip to the northwest where he has considerable mining interests.

Mr. P. H. Shearer, of Erlanger, and three sons, R. M., of the Philippines, Clare, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and H. W., of Newport, spent Thursday of last week at Lonesome Hole on Gunpowder creek, trying to catch some of the fine fish that infest that stream of water.

George C. Goode, one of Covington's popular grocers, passed through Burlington, last Monday, in command of an auto party that was enroute to East Bend to celebrate Labor Day feasting on chicken and melons. The party was out to have a good time and no doubt they had it.

Mr. and Mrs. Tibbetts, of Detroit, Michigan, were guests of Mrs. Tibbett's uncle, J. C. Revill and family a few days the past week. Mr. Tibbetts is patent counsel for the Packard Automobile Company, in one of which machines he and his wife made the trip in one day from Detroit to Burlington.

Thomas Cowen and wife left last Saturday for their home in Memphis, Tenn., after a ten days very pleasant visit with his relatives and friends here. It is hoped that Mr. and Mrs. Cowen will find it convenient to visit his native heath again in a reasonable length of time where they will always find a cordial welcome. As souvenirs of his brief sojourn at his old home Mr. Cowen took back with him a trio of delicious hams, and he will give some of the Memphians a practical demonstration of the kind of meat that graces the tables among the Kentuckians from whence he came.

LETTER FROM CALIFORNIA.

Colton, Cala., Aug. 20, 1913.

Thinking some of my friends in old Boone would like to know how I like, and what I think of the Sunny California, I thought I would write a letter to the Recorder.

I think the climate here is fine. Our daughter, who was not in very good health when we came here is greatly improved, so I think it is a very healthy place to live. When I first came I didn't like the place very well but after I had been here a while and got acquainted with the ways and people I liked it better, and now I think it is a fine place to live.

I am working for a ranchman from Illinois. He has a large alfalfa ranch, an orange grove and peach orchard. This is a fine place to grow alfalfa. We have cut four times this season and will cut it three more times, making seven in all. It makes about two tons to the acre at one cutting.

He will have a good crop of oranges this year. It is nice when working in the grove in winter and you sit down to rest, to have a nice big orange fresh from the tree to eat.

Mr. Hizer, my boss, myself and four other friends went on a fishing trip over to the Catalina Island. We didn't catch many fish but it was a fine trip. We went from Colton to San Pedro in automobiles, which gave us a chance to see a lot of the country. Then we took the steamer which makes one trip daily from San Pedro to Cataline.

Catalina is a nice place to go to rest, bathe, fish and have a good time.

We had such a nice time that when I got home I sent my wife and children over for a week.

Mr. Hizer, who is one of those large hearted men, and also has a large automobile, took them over to Los Angeles in his car, which pleased the children greatly.

If any of my friends ever come to California near Colton don't fail to come and see me, as we are always glad to see anyone or hear from any one in "Old Kentuck."

EDUCATIONAL HEADQUARTERS

At Florence Fair Attracted Much Attention and Comment.

A new feature at the Boone Co Fair last week which attracted much attention and comment was the Educational tent. It served as a rest room and headquarters for those interested in educational matters. Several articles of interest were on exhibition made by students in schools of the county—manual training and sewing. The spelling banner won by Florence school last spring, the attendance banner won at Louisville by the teachers of the county and other trophies and pictures were on exhibition. Literature was handed out and the Division Boards held their meetings in the tent. Hundreds of persons visited the tent and expressed their appreciation of this method of increasing interest in the schools. It is intended that this shall be a beginning of greater things in the matter of arousing public interest in things educational.

Hopeful Lutheran Church.

A series of meetings will be opened in the Hopeful Luthern church, Saturday evening, Sept. 6th at 7:30 p. m. These meetings will continue for nine days, closing Sept. 14th by the celebration of the Holy Communion. All members of the church are kindly urged to attend these meetings. Every one is welcome to worship with us and we extend a special invitation to those in the community who are without a church home.

The pastor will preach on the following topics during the series:

Sept. 6th—"The Way, The Truth and the Life." John 14 6.

Sept. 7th—"A Historic Curse."

Sept. 8th—"The two Estates of Man." Luke 16:19-31.

Sept. 9th—"Sowing and Reaping," Gal. 6:7-8.

Sept. 10—"The Mediatorial Door," John 10:9.

Sept. 11—"The Christian Race," Heb. 12:1-2.

Sept. 12—The New Birth," John 3: 1-6.

Sept. 13—"What Think Ye of Christ?" Matt. 22:42.

Sept. 14—The celebration of the Holy Communion. This last service will be held at 10:30 a. m. All others of the series will be held at 7:30 p. m.

Explains Itself.

Mr. W. L. Riddell,
Burlington, Ky.

Dear Mr. Riddell:

I have been informed that some Postmasters have refused to permit such articles as letter heads, bill heads, envelopes, etc., to be mailed under the parcel post rate.

I have called the attention of the Post office Department to this fact and have a ruling on same, a copy of the letter, I insert as follows:

"Hon. A. B. Rouse,
House of Representatives,
My Dear Mr. Rouse:

The office has been requested by the office of the First Assistant Postmaster General to advise you of the postage rate on letter heads, bill heads, envelopes etc.

These articles, together with order forms, report forms, etc., mainly blank, are fourth-class mail and, when sent unsealed, are chargeable with postage at the rates set fourth in section 3 and 7 of the Parcel Post Regulations.

Yours Very Truly,
W. J. BARROWS,
Acting Third Assistant Postmaster General."

Twenty Thousand at Educational Barbecue

CO-OPERATION was the keynote of the great Camden barbecue, which was held in the huge woods pasture outside of Versailles on the 20th. Many noted speakers from every part of the United States told of the effects of co-operation among farmers, but the salient point of this social and educational event was that the host and his neighbors and his friends were an example of what co-operation can accomplish.

Co-operation Helped.

Your correspondent was congratulating Mr. Camden on the great success of his educational barbecue when he smiled and interrupted him by saying, "I am delighted that you feel as you do about this affair, but the thing which has made it a complete success is the co-operation of my good friends and neighbors." Pausing a moment to point toward the big tent where the meals were being carved and sandwiches distributed, he continued: "A number of those white aproned fellows that you see in that tent busy slicing meat and waiting on the people are my neighbors, who are helping me make this a real success. No men that I might have been able to hire for more money could have created the splendid atmosphere that these good friends have. And the mayor and the men of Versailles have agreed that all stores shall be closed from 10 until 4 today. It is all co-operation. Tell your paper that this barbecue is as growing, progressive spirit that will make it a strong state in the near future.

Kentucky Has "Arrived."

It was not alone your correspondent who caught this feeling that seemed to be in the very air of the barbecue. Men who had traveled long distances to talk with the people about co-operation, men who had never faced a Kentucky audience before, sensed it. The evening of the barbecue three of the speakers gathered in Mr. Camden's home to chat over the happiness of the day. Twilight was deepening among the trees in the lawn and the last trolley car was leaving with the stragglers from the barbecue when one of the speakers turned to the others and said: "I'm going to make a statement, and I want you two fellows to say what you think of it. You, like me, happen to be from a far northern state, and you should be able to judge if I'm right in what I say." He stopped talking, looking out among the shadows that grew among the trees as if to gather his thoughts properly; then he continued: "I came down to this barbecue wondering what I would see. I had heard, of course, that Kentucky was beginning to think about co-operation, education and many other things. Why, she isn't beginning; she has begun. It was written large all over those people today. Things will happen in Kentucky from now on, and happen fast. SHE HAS ARRIVED. If I should leave roasting meat and night had settled over the hills the barbecue grounds became a mass of shifting grotesque shadows, savory odors and wood smoke. By early morning the five huge kettles were bubbling contentedly with rich, thick old fashioned burgoo. It seemed as if enough food had been prepared overnight to feed an army.

Several gentlemen were standing near one of the numerous tanks that were kept filled with ice and water for the thirsty crowd. At length one of them remarked: "I'm as thirsty as I can be, but I'm afraid to drink that water. It looks a little muddy, and I'm always afraid of getting typhoid fever when the water supply is as low as it is now after a long drought."

Water Was Analyzed.

The men were still hesitating when one of Mr. Camden's friends stepped up and remarked casually: "I think I can make you comfortable about the water. Mr. Camden usually does things up brown. He thought that there might be some danger, so he had this water analyzed to be on the safe side."

Each of the men took several deep drinks and looked much relieved.

A Crowd of 20,000.

The crowd? Oh, it was estimated all the way from 10,000 to 30,000. There must have been the full 20,000 that was given as the heading for this story of the barbecue because 1,000 automobiles were parked on the grounds and more than that number of vehicles were just behind them. Allowing an average of five people to the vehicles and automobiles gives 10,000. The interurban cars gave their figures as 5,000. Add to this 15,000, those that walked, those that came on horseback, on bicycles and motorcycles, and you will find that 20,000 is about right. These figures may be got at in another manner. In preparing to serve the burgoo to the people 14,000 tin cups and spoons had been provided, and they did not go around. Anyhow, it was fully as big a crowd as any one had hoped for.

much Woodford county's success as it is mine. It is a success because of neighborly co-operation."

Neighborly Atmosphere.

That the huge crowd that began to arrive as early as 8 o'clock felt this atmosphere of neighborliness and co-operation, of which Mr. Camden had spoken, was evident. It was a gathering of people who were thinking; a crowd that had come to see and hear others who were thinking; a crowd that had on its "Sunday go to meeting" clothes and manners, for there was not a loud voice or a quarrelsome tone on the grounds the whole day through. Even the babies and children forgot to fret or cry while their mothers chatted with friends under the shade of the forest trees, and the men discussed crops and the drought. Everywhere there were good natured, pleasant laughter and smiling faces. It is not often that a host can entertain 20,000 guests and have nothing to mar the day. The meeting showed conclusively that there is a new spirit abroad in this wonderful old state—a here and be gone ten years I would not be able to recognize the state, I'm sure, because it will have changed so materially in that time. Am I right, fellows?"

"Sure you're right," answered the others in a breath.

Of course they had something to eat. By 1 o'clock the afternoon of the 19th wagons loaded with choice beef began to arrive, and old George Jaubert hurried about to see that the coals in the trenches were as warm as they should be and that the frames to hold the meat were steady for such a mighty load.

Preparing the Food.

Eighteen busy colored men sat on empty boxes chatting while they peeled and cut the fifty bushels of potatoes that were to be used in the making of the burgoo. When the 6,000 pounds of beef were in place over the glowing coals hay frame loads of dressed mutton came to the tables to be prepared for the trenches. It required three wagons to bring the 119 sheep that were to help feed the multitude. Later after the frames were full of gently

Thirteen Speakers.

As there were thirteen speakers during the day, it would be an impossibility to give any idea of what they said. It is sufficient to say that each and every talk was educational in its tone. That the state at large may get an idea of all the talks it might be well to give Mr. Camden's address of welcome in whole. He seems to have caught and hugged close to himself the feeling that would show itself in the crowd at the barbecue, the feeling which the speakers and your correspondent caught, the feeling that in some subtle way foreshadows Kentucky's coming greatness. The address is as follows:

Mr. Camden's Address.

"Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen—My friends, I give you, one and all, a most hearty welcome. I am truly delighted to have you here today.

"I hope you will allow me to tell you briefly what was in my mind when I decided to have this barbecue.

"Always in thinking of Kentucky I have a great inspiring vision. I have been in most of the states of the Union and have traveled in many lands, but I have never beheld a state or empire that has such material possibilities, variety of soil, diversity of products and other blessings as our own beloved state—old Kentucky.

"In ten years' time she will lead every state in the Union in the production of coal and, what is more, as time goes on will increase the lead and hold it, for she has a greater deposit of high grade coal than either Pennsylvania or West Virginia. It can also be truly said of Kentucky, as of almost any other country, that if we were absolutely isolated from the rest of the world we have within ourselves everything necessary for the development of a most advanced and prosperous civilization. We have in abundance the raw materials—iron, coking coal, timber, fire and porcelain clays, phosphate deposits, oil, gas and an endless variety of mineral wealth, a most varied soil, grazing lands and a beneficent climate.

Great Farming State.

"Yet, while the mineral wealth of the state is a vital thing and means more to us than we can now understand, to my mind the very soul and heart of Kentucky must always dwell in her farm lands and pastures, beautiful, gently rolling, the fairest and greenest the sun shines upon and fruitful as the delta of the Nile. Kentucky will ever be a great farming state, and the character of her agriculture will determine the character and development of her people. Some one has well said that a people cannot be greater or stronger than their soil.

"What I wish to draw attention to today and to emphasize is the well recognized fact that in mining, manufacturing and all productive enterprises the basic form of wealth is in itself only about 50 per cent of the problem involved. The other 50 per cent is in organization, which really means co-operation. Granting that our soil would grade No. 1 in fertility—which in many cases it will not do, though by intelligent and industrious methods it can be made to—as we now stand, with our imperfect system of soil education, organization and co-operation, we farmers are realizing but half of what we are entitled to from our farms.

Rural School System.

"As an illustration of what can be accomplished by education and co-operation, I placed on the first page of our program the rural school symbol of Denmark, the owl perched on a spade, the union of wisdom and labor. To follow the matter still further, I will say that the unique and great little kingdom of Denmark has practically the same population as Kentucky, but Kentucky has almost three times as great an area, with an incalculably greater variety of resources. From the standpoint of a Kentuckian, the only resource that Denmark has is in her people, as it is a flat country, with very thin soil, and we would consider it almost impossible to extract a living from it. It has no mines, no forests, no mills or manufacturing plants. It is devoted almost exclusively to dairy work. Its climate is bad and inhospitable beyond expression. There are only sixteen weeks in the year when it is possible to turn the cattle out. And then, for economy, they are tethered carefully in the fields, so that no grass or clover will be wasted by being trampled upon. In spite of these most unfavorable farming conditions, Denmark is the only country in the world today where the city population is decreasing and the rural population increasing, owing entirely to its advanced rural school system.

"Notwithstanding these adverse and harsh natural conditions the export of butter in 1911 was about 229,320,000 pounds, and to Great Britain alone it amounted to $51,142,715. The total amount of cream and milk exported amounted to $4,121,520.

"The money value of eggs exported in the same year amounted to $7,906,000.

"The export of bacon from Denmark in the same year amounted to 252,252,000 pounds, or a cash value of $32,852,960, making a total cash valuation of exports of $95,953,195, in addition to what was consumed at home.

Denmark's Example.

"Furthermore, the country is so flat and wet that the dreaded foot and mouth disease (practically unknown to us) has to be unceasingly watched.

"This truly marvelous result was brought about by education, co-operation and governmental aid. It was really through great misfortune and distress that the Danes worked out these great results and evolved into a wonderful people. In 1863, when Bismarck annexed Schleswig-Holstein, Denmark was in the blackest despair. Financial ruin stared her in the face. It was then determined to try to lift the dark cloud that enveloped her by establishing the rural schools which now dot every part of her country.

Individualism Harmful.

"With us the chief obstacle to organization and co-operation, to my mind, is the intense individualism of the Kentuckian. That spirit of self reliance, indomitable will and courage to stand alone and all sufficient which made him the greatest pioneer the world has ever known, is to a measure a detriment now and blocks his further progress and material development. We are not living in the age of the coonskin cap and long barreled rifle. Our times are strenuously competitive and the degree of our civilization very complex. Realizing this condition, we should set about intelligently, with determination and our eyes open, to learn the value of organization and co-operation and to fully understand the destructive quality of unintentional selfish individualism.

"We must establish team work among ourselves, we must trust one another, if we are to prosper further as a people and advance the solidarity of Kentucky interests.

Future of Kentucky.

"I have an unbounded faith in the future of Kentucky and in the ability of Kentuckians to do things when their attention and interests are centered upon those things. It is because of my ambition and hope to personally help in quickening this movement that I decided to give this barbecue. Telling you again of the pleasure it gives me in having you here today, I will now turn over the proceedings of the day to the chairman."

Perilous Boating.

On the west coast of Ireland, near the mouth of the river Shannon, are several large sea caves which open into each other. But the visitor needs a good guide and a good boatman, for the sea in insidious and the labyrinth of caves intricate. On one occasion, writes Aubrey de Vere in his "Recollections," soon after a party had entered the boatman suddenly shouted, "Bend down your heads for your lives!"

No one saw any danger, but the boatman felt the placid water insensibly rising and knew that the tide had turned. At last the visitors knew this, too, for it was not until the boat had ascended within a few inches of the roof that it began to descend.

"Pull your best!" exclaimed the man at the helm. "If the second wave reaches us, we are lost!" But before the second wave reached the cave the boat had issued from its mouth.

No Wonder She Blushed.

"That's a nice looking fellow who's just come in," said the young man who was dining with his best girl. "Is he a friend of yours?"

"Yes, indeed, I know him well," laughed the maiden.

"Shall I ask him to join us?"

"Oh, George," said the girl, blushing, "this is so sudden!"

"Sudden? What do you mean?" he asked in surprise.

"Why—why, that's our young minister."—Ladies' Home Journal.

He Could Talk.

"I am quite well, thank you," responded the red man.—Washington Times.

ODDITIES on the ISTHMUS
By E. W. PICKARD

DYNAMITE BLAST IN CULEBRA CUT.

Colon, C. Z.—Frequently the officials of the Republic of Panama—the minor ones—have been ridiculed for the combination of stupidity and pomposity that governs their conduct. Sometimes the ridicule is not deserved, but often it is. Some months ago an American resident of the city of Panama imported a pair of riding boots from the states, and in his manifest submitted to the native customs authorities he so listed them, with the price, $9.50. The paper was returned to him with curt instructions to correct it. Not knowing how he had erred, he consulted the customs man and was told the boots must be listed as two separate articles, thus: "One riding boot, value $4.75; one riding boot, value $4.75." Mr. American complied silently, and received his boots.

The Isthmus of Panama does not belong to the English, never did, and there are not many real Englishmen there. Yet the presence of a large number of British subjects—the Jamaican negroes—has forced on the inhabitants an English custom, that of vehicles taking the left side of the road. Probably this is due to the fact that most of the cab drivers are Jamaicans. All the people of that island are intensely proud of being subjects of King George, and they are tenacious of such British customs as they know. Every cabby in Panama and Colon—and their number is legion—carries either a bicycle gong or an automobile horn with, which to warn other vehicles and pedestrians of his approach, and on a busy day the noise is more unpleasant than that of the blasting in the Culebra cut.

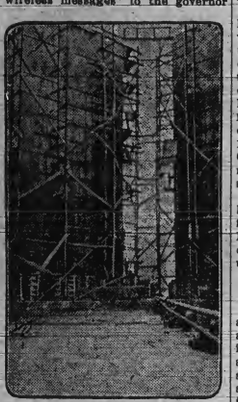
Speaking of the blasting reminds me that one of the very high up engineers on the canal job is exceedingly afraid of dynamite. He is also a strict disciplinarian and does not allow the workmen to loaf. Whenever one of the frequent "doby shots" or small blasts is to be fired, the nearest steam shovel emits a series of short, quick toots and the men scurry to cover. As soon as Mr. Engineer appears in the cut to see that the laborers are losing no time, the warning whistles are heard from steam shovels all along the way and he speedily returns to his office on the hill, leaving the unprodded workmen to resume their leisurely gait.

Tourists flocked to the canal zone in such increasing numbers that the Panama Railway company—which means the United States government—decided to erect a new Washington hotel in Colon to supplant the old hostelry of that name. The architect designed a handsome four-story structure of concrete and, to take full advantage of the cool breezes from the Atlantic, provided in his plans for a large roof garden and two dumb waiters running up to it. The builders made the roof all right, and put in the dumb waiters, but when the hotel was nearing completion some one discovered there was no opening in the roof for the aforesaid dumb waiters. The necessary changes would cost several hundred dollars, and the government official who passed upon the expenditures decided against making them as the hotel already had cost more than had been expected. Consequently those two dumb waiters run up to the ceiling of the fourth story and there stop, while the roof garden, having no service, remains unopened.

Charlie Ying, a moon-faced celestial, had prospered on the isthmus and decided not long ago to open an "American bar." He knew some English for he used to work on the docks at Canton, but when it came to the important matter of wording his sign he thought best to consult another Chinaman, who formerly lived in Chicago. This was the result of their joint effort:

AMERICAN BAR
WE SERVE WHISKY COCKIES AND GIN RICKTAILS.

Close to the shore of Taboga island, so close, in fact, that they are connected at low tide, lies a little, rocky, wooded islet known as Morro. For many, many years it was owned by a Spanish family, the present representative of which is a widow of small means. On Morro is a flowing spring of excellent water, and one of the Pacific navigation companies desired to acquire the islet as a watering station for its vessels. The widow was paid a fair price, and as a bonus was given life passes for herself and her children on the boats of the company. No sooner had the deal been consummated than the estimable lady packed up her duds, stored her household belongings and with her family boarded one of the steamships for a trip. The journey was so pleasant that they have been traveling continually on the company's ships ever since, and the man who engineered the purchase of Morro is wondering who got the best of it.



Panama City's water supply is derived from the Rio Grande reservoir, a little lake quite close to the canal. For obvious reasons bathing or wading in it is forbidden, and all around it are signs stating that fact. Recently the wife of a member of the canal commission was entertaining friends from the states, and in the course of their wanderings one day they came upon the reservoir. They were tired and dusty and the cool water looked so inviting that they all took off their shoes and stockings and went in wading. Unfortunately for them, one of the efficient zone policemen came upon them and arrested the whole party. They were taken before the nearest magistrate, and despite the pleading of the commissioner, who had been hastily called to the rescue, each one was compelled to pay a fine and listen to a sharp lecture on law-breaking and sanitation.

In one respect at least, Panama is like no other Latin-American city that I have seen. It has no distinctively residence quarter. "Now that we have seen where the people do business, let's see where they live," said I to my amateur guide.

"You have been seeing that too," was the reply. "The people live over the shops in all parts of the city—all the people, including the wealthy ones. The latter, however, also have beautiful country places in the savanna lands a few miles away, and spend much of the year there."

The asylum for the insane on Ancon Hill is inhabited mainly by negroes from Jamaica and Barbados. These colored folk seem to go crazy in large numbers, and I asked a doctor there the reason. "Rum and religion" was his terse reply. "They use a lot of both, and not much is needed to throw them off their mental balance."

One of the Jamaicans in the asylum spends every evening sending vocal "wireless messages" to the governor of his home island, telling him how badly his compatriots are being treated on the isthmus. He utters the words of the messages with a sputtering explosiveness that is curiously like the sound of the wireless sender.

Visits of congressional investigating committees are no novelty to the people who are making the canal. Neither are they any pleasure. It is the general belief down there that these are mere junkets, and it must be admitted that the visitors often show a colossal ignorance concerning the canal. Colonel Sibert, engineer in charge of the Atlantic division, one day spent hours showing a congressman over the Gatun locks and explaining it all to him. When the colonel concluded his little lecture the lawmaker clasped his hands behind him, gazed about and remarked ponderously: "Well! So this is the famous Culebra cut! I'm glad I've seen it and learned more about it."

Poor Colonel Sibert collapsed.

Nobody now lives where once stood the proud city of Old Panama—that is, nobody except one old native woman who has a little shack by the beach and sells liquid refreshment to the thirsty tourist. Her stock includes various soft drinks, beer and, hanging from the walls by strings, bottles of imported champagne. These last look as though they had been hanging there since the day when Morgan and his buccaneers departed from the ruined city.

CITY MAN'S DREAM OF FARM

If He Can Make It Come True There Should Be a Great Uplift of Agriculture.

Every right-feeling city man looks forward to spending his old age on a farm in the country. This is a true statement, but subject to modifications.

In the first place, the farm will be in the country, but not too far in. The idea is to have it near enough the city to run in for a night at the theater and get home again by 12:30.

The farmhouse will be a little more complicated than farmhouses usually are. It will be hot-water heated and vacuum cleaned. It will have of tiled bathrooms perhaps three, a Dutch kitchen, an oak-painted dining room, a library, billiard room, den, smoking room, a Louis Quatorze drawing room and bedrooms with period furniture. Farmers whose tastes are not so simple will doubtless add a pergola and a sunroom to this plain, but serviceable, equipment.

The farm, whether it is 10, 50 or 100 acres, must have a cow, chickens and a garden. The cow will lay milk and butter, the chickens will lay eggs and broilers and the gardens will lay vegetables and small fruits. Also there will be an orchard that will lay apples. Since the farm is to be self-contained, it will raise its own violets, mushrooms and American Beauty roses, and will, of course, have a gasoline well at which the automobile can be watered. While the owner of the farm will not engage in the actual manual labor of tilling the soil, he expects greatly to assist nature by exercising an intelligent supervision over the growing crops. With him bossing the job and half a dozen farmhands doing the chores, agriculture may well apprehend a great uplift.—Toronto Star.

VALUE OF WORLD'S DIAMONDS

Estimates That Finished Output Could Be Packed in Box Measuring 3x6x8 Feet.

Diamonds of the weight of twenty-eight and two-fifths tons, which would fill a box ten and one-half cubic yards and have a value of nearly $1,000,000,000, have been taken from the earth from the earliest time to the present day, according to the estimate just made by M. De Launay, the well-known metallurgist, writes the Paris correspondent of the Philadelphia Ledger.

These figures, however, only concern the stones before cutting which reduces their weight volume by half, but multiplies their value by five. A box three feet high, six wide and eight long would thus hold the total world's output of these gems in their finished condition and would have a market value of $4,700,000,000, according to present prices.

Of this quantity, according to M. De Launay, 100,000,000 carats of the value of $55,000,000 have been contributed by India, the source of all diamonds from ancient times up to the eighteenth century, and 12,000,000 carats of the value of $100,000,000 by Brazil between 1723 and 1910. These fields are now, however, practically exhausted, and gems representing 142,000,000 carats of the value of $700,000,000 would come from South Africa, which is now almost the sole source of the world's supply.

Apart from South Africa, Mr. De Launay says, the only other diamond fields which count at all are those of New South Wales, the annual output of which, according to the last figures, is 2,205 carats.

Father of All Hot Springs.

The Sprudel is the most ancient of all Carlsbad's fountains, the father of all hot springs, and still pours forth in primeval vigor the greatest flood of all. It rises like a geyser in its basin, a steaming, spouting column an inch and a half thick and from six to thirteen feet high. Around it stands priestesses, the spring-girls, dressed in white water-proof uniforms. They fix the drinking cups at the end of poles and catch the water as it comes fresh from the earth's heart. The peologists call Carlsbad's fountain virgin or volcanic water. They have their sources in no rainfall sinking to fill subterranean reservoirs. Created in those glowing inner laboratories of the mother earth, the water here leaps to light and air for the first time. Pagan memories seem to stir in one at the thought; it becomes easy to believe that the springs bring from recesses where it has lurked hidden since creation, some magic, unspoiled, primeval energy, and that the cheerful, smiling German peasant girls who toil so tirelessly are captive woodland creatures serving forces more ancient than the gods.—Harper's Magazine.

Nil Desperandum.

Percy Parkington rose and brushed the dust from his knees. Then, drawing himself up to his full height, he gazed resentfully upon the form of Miss Muriel Muggins, who nonchalantly fanned herself the while.

"Very well, Miss Muggins," came in bitter tones from Percy. "Oh, very well! You have spurned me, it is true! Indeed, you have spurned me twice! But, though despair eats my heart, I shall not die! I mean to go into the busy world. I will fight! I will win! My name shall become known and my riches shall become envied—"

"Pardon me for interrupting you, Mr. Parkington," interjected Miss Muggins, "but when you have accomplished all that you may try me again."

"Cured"

Mrs. Jay McGee, of Stephenville, Texas, writes: "For nine (9) years, I suffered with womanly trouble. I had terrible headaches, and pains in my back, etc. It seemed as if I would die, I suffered so. At last, I decided to try Cardui, the woman's tonic, and it helped me right away. The full treatment not only helped me, but it cured me."

A treat for our readers that we have arranged for is a series of twelve illustrated articles on

The Panama Canal and the Isthmus in History and Romance

By Edward W. Pickard

Mr. Pickard is that type of globe-trotting author who seeks the quaint and curious places and people as subjects for his clever descriptive articles. In his present series of twelve articles which we have arranged to print, he has touched not only the actual work of building the canal, and the people who have accomplished it, but has gone into what the newspaper worker knows as the side lines, and which as a rule are of as much interest as the main story. This is particularly true in this case. After our readers have completed the last of Mr. Pickard's articles they will have a better understanding of the Panama Canal, and conditions within and surrounding the canal zone.

In the magisterial election contest from Georgetown, Scott county, which was tried before Judge Jas. W. Cammack, special judge appointed by Gov. McCreary, was tried here Monday in the law office of Messrs. Tomlin & Vest. Judge Cammack decided that the vote was a tie, with no appeal. The case has been on trial for some time, but agreeable to all concerned the case was brought here for trial. The case will now have to be settled in their own way or appeal from the decision. R. F. Offutt was the contestee and Steven O'Banion defendant. J. Craig Bradley and Victor Bradley, attorneys, Georgetown, were counsel for O'Banion and B. M. Lee of the same city represented Offutt. Those in attendance were J. Craig and Victor Bradley, B. M. Lee, R. F. Offutt Steven O'Banion W. McNair, Geo. E. Pelton and Louie Finley.

Sunday morning, about 2 o'clock Andrew Jackson, a negro employed by the conestruction company on the Cincinnati Southern Railway was killed by some unknown negro or negroes. It is supposed the row occurred over a crap game. When the officers went to the camp they were unable to obtain any information that would lead to the arrest of the guilty party or parties. The dead man was perforated by several bullets. Squire Jim O'Neal of Verona, held an inquest over the remains and returned a verdict of killed by unknown parties. The remains were buried in the Salem church cemetery. It is stated that the party who did the shooting is known and will be arrested to-day (Tuesday) and taken to the county jail. At the time of the killing the camp was in an uproar with drunken negroes who were bandishing revolvers and large knives. The camp is located about a mile east of Walton.

Midnight intruders have been disturbing our citizens by attempting to break into their houses. Last week J. M. Arnold was aroused by someone trying to get in the screen window having poked a hole through the wire. Mr. Arnold covered the individual with a gun but he ducked and ran. Monday night someone attempted to enter the residence of Mrs. Aggie Thomas who awakened Prof. Chambers who boards at the house and when he raised the window upstairs the marauder ran. The supposition is that these visits are made by the negroes from the O. & C. construction camps. The only remedy is for each citizen to have a well loaded shot gun and deposit its contents into these individuals. There are some talk of the town council employing a night watchman while these negroes are in this vicinty. Monday it was stated that the negroes in the Billter & Readnour camp refused to work and spent the day shooting craps and drinking "booze."

On Saturday afternoon last a delightful event occurred at the pretty little home on High St., Where dwell Mr. W. Perry Corbin and his sisters, Mrs. Matilda Lane Mrs. Sarah Anderson and Mrs. Helen Corbin. A number of old friends and their families met under the beautiful maples and spread a picnic luncheon consisting of most delicious things eatable. This was much enjoyed but the prayers offered and the beautiful talk made by Rev. J. M. Ballentyne and the hymns sung were more enjoyable, for they edified the inmates of the home, all of whom are semi-invalids, who seldom have an opportunity to go to church. Mrs. Jessie Cleek had brought her guitar and after the religious service played and sang many beautiful ballads of long ago, whose places alas, have been filled by the taste-degrading, rag time songs of today. Occasions like this, where old friendships are strengthened, warm our hearts as nothing else can. Just before the "good-night" time came, Mrs. Corbin surprised us by bringing out some fine watermelons which were quickly demolished by the company.

A pretty little romance of several years duration culminated Thursday evening, Sept. 4, in the beautiful rainbow wedding of Miss Mellecent Ann Berkshire and Stanley Barnes Palmer, of Auburn, Ind. The impressive ceremony uniting this happy couple was said at the Christian church by Rev. Jones, of Bloomington, Illinois. As the bridal party entered, the church Mrs. L. E. Keim, who presided at the organ, played the wedding march. The attendants were Misses Margaret Roberts, of Louisville, maid of honor; Sidney Graeff, of Oxford, O., best man; Misses Bella Thompson, Lucille Berkshire Maude Asbury, Marietta Stephens, Ruth Fuller, of Oxford, Ind., and Helen Crisler, of New York, brides maids. Messrs. Arthur Schooey, Fred Yeager, Moss Taylor, Burton Keim, Mr. Samms, of Oxford, Ohio, and Robert Berkshire, brother of the bride, were the groomsmen.

The bride was beautifully gowned in ivory satin, a veil caught up with tiny flowers, and carried a bouquet of bride's roses. The groom wore a conventional black. Miss Thompson was beautiful in blue crepe de chine and lace; Miss Berkshire wore blue satin trimmed in brocade and chiffon; Miss Stephens and Miss Asbury were both charmingly gowned in lavender crepe de chine, and Miss Crisler wore yellow satin with blue chiffon and pearls, while Miss Fuller was exquisite in yellow chiffon over satin.

Ferns and white bells and beautiful vines composed the church decorations.

A reception followed the ceremony at the bride's beautiful home above town. Mr. and Mrs. Palmer left immediately for a tour of the North. On their return they will be at home in Oxford, Ohio. The well wishes of a host of friends follow them on their life journey.

FREE TURNPIKE PROPOSITION.

To Get Them is Going to Cost Large Amount of Money.

The Recorder has been asked how about the free turnpike proposition that will be voted on at the next regular election. The proposition is not in accord with the Recorder's idea of securing good roads in this county as outlined by it some time since, but as that plan is not acceptable to those who are pushing the proposition it will do the next best thing and take what it can get. The people of Boone Co. that is a majority of them have decided that they want good roads and to get them it is going to cost a large amount of money and the amount will be unnecessarily large, unless the financial feature is closely safeguarded. The entire scope of the plan that has been put up to the voter will be fully expained before the election and those who will have to pay the fiddler will have an idea what it will cost them, but it must be remembered that good roads are not dear at any reasonable price.

BREEDING OF PIGEONS

Eight or Nine Pairs of Squabs in Year is Big Record.

In Most Cases Disease Will Be Found In Lofts Where Birds Do Not Receive Proper Attention—Age That Is Profitable.

(By C. GRAHAM.)

Pigeons lay only two eggs at one laying period—this requiring three days. They rest a day between the first and second egg. They immediately begin sitting. The period of incubation is 17 days, and for the first five to seven days of the squab's life it is nourished on "pigeon's milk." I have never known of a pair of pigeons that would begin breeding or even preparing a nest for a second family until after these youngsters were beginning to take ordinary feed instead of this pigeon milk. Of course, the old birds feed the young during their entire life as squabs, or until they are able to leave the nest, and often they feed them for a few days on the floor. Eight or nine pairs of squabs are all that can be expected from a pair of breeders during a year, and such breeders are very hard to find.

In order to avoid dark-skinned squabs it is advisable not to breed from birds that have very dark legs or beaks. Many amateurs have an idea that a bird with black plumage is more likely to be dark-skinned than a white-feathered bird is, but this is not the case, as some of the whitest-skinned squabs that have been produced were from black pigeons.

It is to be regretted that disease is becoming more common among pigeons. In most cases disease will be found in lofts where birds have not had proper attention, or where they are so housed as to weaken their vitality or that of their offspring. The life of a breeding bird is generally considered to be ten years, but there are very few pigeons that will pay for their feed after the seventh year, and it is seldom that they will leave any profit after the fifth year. During the second and third years they are supposed to be in their prime.

For this reason, in figuring on a flock of pigeons, it should be remembered that they have practically passed their usefulness in six or seven years, and therefore one-sixth or one-seventh of their original cost should be charged against them each year so that at the end of the time mentioned they will have paid for themselves. In making this statement I have been careful to consult with many of the leading squab producers in the country, and their books show that they lost about 4 per cent. of their young breeders yearly, besides reckoning that when the birds are seven years old they should be sold. They also estimate that about 5 per cent. of the squabs that are hatched do not mature for market and that about 3 per cent. of the eggs that are laid do not hatch, although flocks have been known where 50 per cent. of the eggs did not hatch, and 75 per cent. of the young did not reach maturity, but these cases are exceptions and there is some special reason for this unusual loss.

Suitable Coops.

As the chicks in the flock grow larger the small chicken coops usually used to shelter them become too small and large, open-front coops, which can be moved from place to place, should be provided.

Poultry Pay Best.

There is no kind of stock that pays a higher rate of interest on the amount invested in poultry, although a great many farmers consider it of little if any value.

WHY IS POULTRY VALUABLE?

Eight Excellent Reasons Given to This Pertinent Question by Professor Gilbert of Canada.

(By PROF. JAMES W. GILBERT, Ottawa, Ont.)

Why is poultry valuable to the farmer? is a question asked by hundreds of tillers of the soil who usually keep but a few chickens, and these a mixture of all breeds. The following reasons are given in answer to this pertinent question:

1. Because he ought, by their means to convert a great deal of the waste of his farm into money in the shape of eggs and chickens for market.

2. Because, with intelligent management they ought to be all-year revenue producers, with the exception of possibly two months during the moulting season.

3. Because the poultry will yield him a quicker return for the capital invested than any of the other departments of agriculture.

4. Because the manure of the poultry house will make a valuable composite for use in either vegetable garden or orchard. The birds themselves, if allowed, will destroy all injurious insect life.

5. Because, while cereals and fruits can only be successfully grown in certain sections, poultry can be raised for table use or layers of eggs in any and every part of the country, and at all seasons.

6. Because poultry raising is an employment in which the farmer's wife can engage and leave him free to attend to other departments of farm work.

7. Because it will bring the best results in the shape of new-laid eggs during the winter season, when the farmer has the most time on his hands.

8. Because to start poultry on the farm requires very little capital.

CHEVIOT SHEEP QUITE HARDY

Mountain Breed Does Exceedingly Well on Scant Pasture—Meat Is of Superior Quality.

This is a mountain breed of sheep, hardy, and does well on scant pasture. It is grown very successfully in all of our eastern and central states. Cheviot mutton is of very superior quality. This breed may be classed with the long wool breeds of sheep, as their fleece will weigh from six to eight pounds. The ewes weigh about 150 pounds, and the rams, 200 pounds. The breed is pure white, except the nose, which is black. Cheviots are of unusually strong constitution, excellent foragers and will secure a living where other sheep might fail.

Cost of Silage.

Good silage is worth about $3 per ton to feed when timothy hay is worth $7 per ton. It costs $1.75 to $2 per ton to raise and store silage, so the price will have to be established according to the conditions. Roughly, ensilage is figured to weigh 40 pounds per cubic foot, but this naturally varies with the depth of the silo.

Feeding Counts.

It is the full feeding on good, sound food that makes the paying difference between the plump, well-feathered chickens that command the best prices and the lean, thin-feathered specimens that are too often a drug on the market.

Capons Are Peaceable.

Capons are quiet, peaceable, have no desire to scrap or quarrel; in fact, their main idea in life seems to be to grow as many pounds of tender, juicy meat as possible on the amount of feed that is given them.

POULTRY NOTES

A young and fat chicken makes an excellent Sunday dinner.

The most profitable period for fattening is about four weeks.

Capons sell best in February, when choice game cannot be exposed for sale.

More turkeys are injured by overfeeding than wrong feeding. Feed often but little at a time.

Free range chickens are never so tender for roasting as those with limited range and fed on pure food.

Corn meal, meat and potatoes are three of the most valuable ingredients in the fattening bill of fare.

The pigeon lofts must be thoroughly cleaned and sprayed and whitewashed and gunned now, and every month during the summer.

FRIEND OF GARDENERS

Toad Is Worth Several Dollars a Season to Land Owner.

Especially Valuable to Greenhouse Men in Keeping Down Slugs, Thousand-Legged Worms and Other Harmful Insects.

(By R. G. WEATHERSTONE.)

The writer, and no doubt many readers of this article, had heard the statement that each toad on a farm is worth several dollars a season to the land owner. It is difficult to place an exact value on any particular beneficial species, but we are learning more and more to appreciate the natural enemies of our destructive insects, and when one of them shows such distinctly beneficial habits as does the toad, it deserves special consideration. Snails, grasshoppers, ants, crickets, wireworms, potato beetles, butworms, army worm, tent caterpillars and many others of equal importance have been found in the stomach of toads. According to one authority, 77 thousand-legged worms were found in one stomach, 37 tent caterpillars in another, 55 gypsy moth caterpillars in another, and 55 army worms in a fourth. One toad had been known to eat 24 gypsy moth caterpillars in succession, and another was seen to devour 86 horseflies in less than ten minutes. Toads have many natural enemies, such as snakes, hawks, and the like, and numbers of them are killed by lawn mowers and farm machinery of various kinds. We can well afford to study toads with a view to giving them our protection. They should not be killed for sport, as many animals are, for they are too valuable. Since they must have water in which to place their eggs and nourish their young for a few weeks, it is suggested that suitable places be maintained for their convenience. A shallow cement pool, having a small but constant water supply will be greatly appreciated by the toads. For garden shelters, make shallow holes in the ground and cover with flat stones or boards. The toads will retire into these in the daytime and comes forth at dusk for their nightly forays.

Toads are especially valuable to greenhouse men in keeping down slugs, thousand-legged worms, plant lice and cut worms. It has been estimated that during the 90-day period extending over May, June and July, a grown toad will consume 1,160 cutworms, 1,800 thousand legged worms, 2,160 sowbugs, 3,240 ants, 360 weevils and 350 ground beetles, the last being beneficial insects. The total sum, therefore, for the 90 days is 360 beneficial insects and 9,720 injurious ones destroyed.

Why Use Plant Food?

The crops which you are growing average to mature in 60 to 90 days. The seasons are short. The plants must have their food every hour they are in the soil, and it must be available or they will not grow. If you think you can trust quick-growing crops on insoluble fertilizers, that is for you to determine, but in my judgment, taking the seasons as they go, wet and dry, hot and cold, you will find you will be the loser. You have to take a great risk as to the weather. That is the largest factor in raising crops. Can you afford to take any risk in the seed, the kind of fertilizer used, or the culture employed, factors over which you have control?

Disenfecting Cow Stables.

Disinfectants cannot destroy germs if they do not come into direct contact with them. Disinfectants should be applied in sufficient quantity to thoroughly saturate the surfaces, after the adhering particles of dirt are removed. In the application of the disinfectant in cow stables it is well to use a broom or stiff brush and thoroughly scrub the floor, feed troughs, stanchions and lower parts of the walls.

The solution can be applied to the ceilings and upper parts of the side walls with a spray pump and must be carried into any crevice and recess into which dirt can enter.

Harbor for Rats.

Boards, posts or rubbish piled up near the poultry yard are afford too good a harbor for rats.

DESTROYING WEEDS IN WALKS

There Are Number of Excellent Chemicals or Sprays Which Can Be Used With Good Success.

(By JULIUS ERDMAN, Colorado Agricultural College.)

It is rather a tedious process and hard on tools to remove weeds or grass from walks by hoeing or cutting them out between the stones, but there are a number of chemicals or sprays which can be used with good success.

1. Salt—Take 1 pound of salt to 1 gallon of water; boil and apply while still hot; or dry salt may be used and then watered in, but this will color the walk more or less, and is not quite so effective.

2. Crude carbolic acid, ½ ounce of the liquid to 1 gallon of water, will also destroy ants.

3. Sulphuric acid, 4-5 ounce of the acid to 1 gallon of water. Best applied with a wooden pail.

4. Take 1 pound of powdered arsenic to 3 gallons of cold water; boil and stir well. Then 7 gallons of cold water with 3 pounds of sal soda.

5. Lime and sulphur, 10 gallons of water, 20 pounds of quicklime and 2 pounds of flowers of sulphur are boiled in iron vessel. After settling, the clear part is dipped off and used when needed.

There are also a number of commercial weed killers in the market which can be bought at seed stores. Application of weed destroyers should best be made on a hot day or night after a rain, with watering pot (sprinkler), and one good application is usually sufficient for the season. As most of them contain poison, either arsenics or acids, great care should be exercised in handling them.

plants to bloom before cold weather.

Procure a shallow pot or pan with good drainage and fill it with fine leaf-mold and good garden soil and press flat. On this surface sprinkle the seeds of the primrose. Sift a dusting of soil and cover with a piece of glass. Set at the edge of the sunlight, but not in the direct rays. Water by setting the pot in a pan of water.

Cyclamen seeds should be sown during August and September in shallow boxes or pots. They prefer light, sandy soil and gentle heat. The seed is slow to germinate and when the seedlings are large enough to handle, they should be removed to similar boxes and the next shift is to pots. Place in a bright spot, but away from the sunshine.

The old-fashioned Madonna lily (Lilium candidum), which is often seen in rural districts, is one of the most beautiful and chaste lilies we have. It grows two or three feet high, and its sweet flowers grow in clusters.

Lily beds must be dug two feet deep, well drained and made light with some leaf mold, or adding muck or sand.

GENERAL FARM NOTES

Dairy farming is the best soil fertility insurance.

There is no prospect of overstocking the dairy cow market.

Here's The Plumb Bob

It's just another proof that Tubular Cream Separators are just up to the minute—miles ahead of anyother. No other machine has it.

What's It For?

It enables you to level the Sharples Dairy Tubular Cream Separator in a minute—quicker than you could find the spirit level you must use to level all other separators. A glance at the plumb bob, hanging there on the back of the Tubular, will always tell you whether the Tubular remains level. In that way you get the very best work out of the Tubular, for all Separators should be kept level to do their best work.

Tubulars have dozens of exclusive fine points and are sold on the level. Bring the wife in. See how simple, perfect and different from others Tubulars are.

ROUSE HEADS RURAL SERVICE COMMITTEE

Plans to Push Bill Raising Pay Of Carriers.

Washington, Sept. 5.—When the House Committee on Postoffices and Post Roads organized today Representative Arthur B. Rouse, of Kentucky, was appointed chairman of the Subcommittee on Rural Service. The other two members of this subcommittee are Representatives H. Robert Fowler, of Illinois, and Ambrose Kennedy, of Rhode Island. To this committee will be referred Mr. Rouse's bill to increase the salaries of rural mail carriers.

Sentiment in the House is growing in favor of the Rouse bill. It seems likely that it will either be favorably reported as a separate measure or that it will be included as a part of the Postoffice Appropriation Bill at the regular session next winter.

The argument of the Kentucky member that while the Postoffice Department has been authorized by Congress to pay larger amounts of money than heretofore to persons who contract to carry mail over star routes—due to the increase of business of the parcel post system—the rural free delivery carriers have not been paid a cent more in salary, is having its effect. These rural carriers are not especially well paid as it is, and the parcel post has greatly increased their labors.

It has been estimated that the Rouse bill will mean an increased appropriation of about $4,500,000 a year. The increase of postal revenues from the parcel post is expected to more than meet this expense in a few years. Mr. Rouse is confident that Congress will have to pass his bill or some thing like it.

The Rouse bill provides for a salary of $535 a year for carriers on routes of six miles and not more than eight miles and so on up to $1,210 a year on routes of twenty-four miles and over.

AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION.

Getting The Most Out of The Farm Manure.

Farmers should use the time in the fall after the busy cropping season is over to clean the manure and litter out of the horse and cow stalls, and the cattle, hog and sheep sheds, and to haul out the remnants of old straw stacks and tramped down and rotting material surrounding them. All such material should be scattered on the land and now is the time to do it.

The winter feeding season will soon be here and this means the accumulation of a large amount of manure, which if correctly saved and applied is exceedingly valuable. Every hundred pounds of stable manure is worth 10 to 15 cents, every ton from $2.00 to $3.00. The liquid is more valuable than the solid and should therefore be saved by the use of ample bedding material.

Improper handling of manure results in great loss. Careful tests have shown that it loses its value in six months if exposed to the weather in the ordinary manure pile. Care must be taken to prevent heating, leaching and the waste of the urine. Most of this loss is prevented when stock, such as cattle and mules, are fed in sheds, the manure being tightly compacted by the tramping of the stock, which excludes the air and prevents heating, the urine being saved by abundant bedding, and the sheltered situation preventing leaching by rains.

On account of sanitary considerations manure can not be allowed thus to accumulate in the dairy barn, in which case it should be removed to a shed or covered pit to prevent loss. It pays to provide such protection for the cow manure, but if the dairymen does not have a shed or pit the manure should not be allowed to accumulate, but should be regularly hauled away and scattered.

One advantage of live stock farming is that it furnishes a supply of manure. The stock farmer keeps most of his land in grass, hay and forage crops, and this means that plant food is kept in the soil and the land is prevented from washing. He carefully saves and applies the manure and his land grows more productive each year. Good crops can not be grown without manuring the land in some way—either by commercial fertilizers, green manure crops, or stable manure, and for Kentucky farms stable manure is by far the most profitable means of fertilizing.

The writer in his own farm practice has hauled and scattered many hundreds of louds of stable manure, Mixed with this was placed on washed, thin, and gullied land, and on this land today are growing rank sods ofgrass.

Kentucky farmers have in the past failed sadly in making the most of their stable manure. On thousands of farms there are fields that have been cropped for generations without the application of a single forkful of manure. With proper attention given to fertilization, with stable litter supplemented by the rational use of ground limestone and ground phosphate rock, and with good rotation systems the crop yield of the state could be doubled in the next generation.

Undoubtedly our farmers will find this work highly profitable. In a recent address in Kentucky, Dr. C. G. Hopkins, of Illinois said "There is no investment which an honest man can make which will pay so high returns—as time and money spent judiciously in land improvement," and it might be added that there is no method of soil improvement available to Kentucky farmers so sure as the hauling and scattering of stable manure, and now is the time to do it. HABITS OF THE ROBIN

Bird Prefers to Build Its Nest Near the House.

Young Songsters Should Not Be Handled Until They Leave Nest of Their Own Accord—Sparrows Rob Them of Worms.

(By CRAIG S. THOMAS.)

Of all the birds that build in trees the robin brings its nest nearest the house. It prefers to be at the front door, where the members of the family are constantly coming and going, and if it can find a suitable place it will build directly over the walk. This makes a number of interesting facts easy of observation.

Let the nozzle of the hydrant drip until the ground below it holds a little pool of water, or by some other means provide a pool somewhere in the yard. To this pool the robin will come for mud to build the walls of her nest. Into it she will souse billfulls of dried grass before mixing it with the mud. In it she will wet herself before flying to her nest to mould the mortar wall of mud and grass to fit her body.

When the young fill the nest every child in the family will want to climb up to see them, and the older children will be tempted to lift them out of the nest, hold them in the hand, and possibly take them into the house a moment to show mother what bird babies are like. But to do this is all but sure to result in the death of the young. A young bird once lifted from the nest has "found his legs," and will never be satisfied in the nest again. He will climb upon its edge and go bumping down on the lawn long before he is able to fly, and the neighbor's cat is sure to get him. Young birds should never be handled until they leave the nest of their own accord.

As the parent-robins search the lawn for worms to feed their young, hopping a little way and then stopping to look and listen, you will often see an English sparrow following close behind and a little to right or left. He is expecting the robin to pull a worm from the ground, when he will dive boldly for it, snatch it away, and make off with it. In this piratical enterprise the sparrow is not infrequently successful.

Note your robins carefully. Discover upon them if possible some distinguishing mark, and see whether they return to you another year. A male with left wing drooping almost to the ground as it hopped, returned three successive years to the same yard. It has doubtless been injured in a fight, which is not an infrequent occurrence. One may not be certain that plumage markings of exceptional character will recur year after year, as plumage may vary with moultings. But any malformation, resulting usually from injury, renders identification all but certain.

ALFALFA AS MILK PRODUCER

Hay, With Proper Kind of Grain and Little Succulence, Will Duplicate June Pasture.

(By L. R. WADRON Superintendent Dickinson, N. D., Sub-Station.)

Alfalfa is of great value as a milk producer, for it is a well known fact that an ample milk flow requires rich feeds. Good June pasture produces an abundance of milk. It has been demonstrated that alfalfa hay, when used with a proper kind of grain and with a little succulence, such as ensilage, will practically duplicate a June pasture.

When cows are properly fed, before turning onto pasture, they show no increase of milk flow upon the pasture. If a dairy cow is properly fed, she must have a ration that contains a larger percentage of protein than is found in common hays or in most of the grains. Protein is supplied through bran, linseed meal or some other concentrate. To pay high prices for these to increase the milk flow means that the cost of milk production is increased, and in many cases to such an extent that milk is produced at a loss, or at a very nominal margin.

Cow and Soil Fertility.

The fertility of the soil can best be maintained by the liberal use of barnyard manure, and the dairy herd not only makes this possible, but dairying is also more remunerative than almost any other branch of farming when it is properly carried on.

Remove Old Canes.

Remove and burn the old raspberry canes immediately after fruiting. This is the best means to control anthracnose, which is the most destructive disease of the raspberry.

The first mastodon skeleton ever found in Kentucky was dug out of the ground in Paris. On the lot where the Y. M. C. A. building is to be erected Prof. Howard Henderson, father of the late Rev. Howard Henderson, former Superintendent of Public Instruction, was having the excavating done to build a structure to be used for a school. The workmen struck an immense skeleton, but were unable to tell what it was, and it afterward proved to be that of a mastodon. It was mounted and sent to the Smithsonian Institution in Washington City, where it still remains.—Paris Democrat.

If Casey county could get its 3,300 poll tax payers and fully 500 boys able to do men's work, devote one week to road working in Casey county, we would have some roads worth while. We will never get good roads until public sentiment demands them and rolls up its sleeves and goes into the work to stay until finished. We will never get good roads until public sentiment demands them and rolls up its sleeves and goes into the work to stay until finished. We need better roads worse than we need anything, and lets do our educating towards that end, and the way will be made easy towards reaching greater things when the roads are decent. —Casey County News.

The reason why reports come from so many counties in Kentucky that the primary election was the most corrupt ever held is that the people in these counties are indifferent on the subject. Whenever public sentiment demands clean elections we will have them all over Kentucky and not until then. Laws mean very little, unless public sentiment is as much against vote-buying as it is against horse stealing it will become just as rare, and just as certain of punishment. The law against one is just as plain as it is against the other. The difference is that public sentiment is all against the one and either for or indifferent to the other.—Elizabethtown News.

The amount collected as tax on dogs, over and above what is necessary to pay the owners of sheep for stock destroyed, is by law turned over to the school fund. The amount varies each year with the number of dogs assessed and the demands made upon the fund by the sheep owners. The latest report from Frankfort shows a material falling off in the number of dogs in the State. As a consequence the school fund will suffer. Has there really been a falling off in the number of dogs, or have the assessors done their duty in the matter? We are inclined to believe that the assessors are negligent. There is no particular incentive in listing the dogs, because there is no particular pay in it to the Assessor. It is somewhat like the old vital statistics law, where the Assessors and Clerks were required to furnish a lot of statistical information without compensation. Perhaps the best plan would be to require a listed dog to be tagged, so that all could see whether a dog had paid the tax or not.—Bowling Green Messenger.

Kentucky is two and a half million dollars in debt and her income is $750,000 less than the cost of running the State this year will be. Whither are we drifting, and wherein lies the remedy for the conditions that exists? The next Legislature will be in session within a few months, and to it we must look for relief. We need a curtailment of expenses, the abolishment of some useless offices and no additional appropriations for anything at all, except what may possibly be absolutely necessary. Our legislators in the future will get ten instead of five dollars pay per day, as heretofore, for their services. If they will pass or amend laws that will relieve the situation they will earn the extra money. If they don't then the taxpayers will have been buncoed in the selection that they made for Senators and Representatives. Our taxes are large enough, and the poor people pay the bulk of them. The rich people who own bonds and stocks do not pay their proper proportion of the burden. There should be a rectification of the wrong; there should be the same economy practiced in the expenditure of the public money that the lawmakers practice in the conduct of their personal affairs, and our Chief Executive should veto appropriation bills unless the money so provided is for what is absolutely needed.—Shelby Record.

Wishing Ring looks better now than she has since the summer of 1913, at Latonia, where she twice won, and in one of her winning races paid in the pari-mutuel pools, the world's record odds of over 900 to 1.—C.-J.

The Drunkard's Cloak.

One of the quaint instruments of torture in England in olden time was a device known as the drunkard's cloak. It was made of wood and in shape resembled a huge inverted flowerpot. Through the small circular aperture in the top was thrust the neck of the imprisoned inebriate. The weight of this ancient counterpart of the straitjacket fell on the victim's shoulders and was sufficient to make every bone in his body ache. With his hands practically pinned to his sides and the garment reaching almost to the ground the only motion allowed him was a slow shuffle of his weary feet as he dragged his way painfully along. One can well believe that any one who has been compelled to don the drunkard's cloak would be very apt to come to the conclusion that a high old time was not worth having at the price.

FARMS NOW FLOURISH AT SCENE OF CARNAGE.

Few Persons Are Familiar With History of Slaughter on Banks of Laughery Creek.

[E. S. Smashey in Indianapolis Sentinel]

Lawrenceburg, Ind., Aug. 21.—Of thousands of persons who travel up and down the beautiful Ohio River in the course of a year perhaps but few are aware that about two miles below Aurora, near the mouth of Laughery creek, was the scene of a brief, but sanguinary slaughter of white men by Indians only a few years after the signing of the Declaration of Independence.

Looking up the wildly picturesque valley of Laughery stream, upon whose banks stood lofty sycamores and sturdy oaks of years unmeasured, one can readily imagine that portions of the forest scenery have changed but little since the eventful period in this section of the Middle West when the sturdy pioneers found here a home and habitation.

Along this creek are today some of the most valuable farms in Dearborn and Ohio counties, and the possessors of them may truly say, as did the Psalmist, "The lines are fallen unto me in pleasant places; yea, I have a goodly heritage." But the heritage is one bought with a price, even though that price be one that was paid in blood more than a century ago.

Previous to 1765 several tribes of Indians who composed what was called the "Six Nations," used as a common hunting ground a considerable portion of Ohio and practically all of southern Indiana. It is related that by special agreement among themselves they declared that no settlement should be made in the territory bounded by the Scioto and Ohio and Wabash Rivers, but that this vast area should remain undisturbed as a hunting ground for all of these tribes.

CLARK GETS BUSY.

Not long however were these dusky denizens of the forest primeval destined to occupy for so little purpose this great domain, with its boundless, undeveloped resources and limitless possibilities. In the spring of 1781 Gen. George R. Clark, contemplating an expedition against the Indians of the Northwest in retaliation or the many depredations they had committed, made a requisition on Colonel Archibald Laughery, who was at that time county lieutenant of Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, to raise 109 men to assist him. Col. Laughery immediately raised a party for this purpose and hastened to join Gen Clark at the falls of the Ohio, whither he had preceded him. Col. Laugherys defeat Aug. 25, 1871, gives the beginning point of the history of Dearborn county.

Laughery's command, consisting of 107 mounted men, embarked in an open boat at the mouth of the Kanawha River and began their descent of the Ohio, according to arrangement, but failing to overtake Gen. Clark as they had anticipated, and food for their horses becoming scarce, they landed Aug. 25 at the mouth of a creek named in memory of Col. Laughery.

Here Laughery's party took their horses ashore and turned them loose to feed, while some of the men cut grass sufficient to keep the animals alive until they could reach the falls. One of the party, having killed a Buffalo, all except a few detailed to cut grass and guard the horses were engaged around the fires which they had kindled, preparing a meal from their Buffalo.

The Indians, who were waiting opposite the Island three miles below to intercept them, were soon informed of their position by spies. Suddenly they were fired upon by the Indians, who came in great force from the woods. The men thus surprised defended themselves as long as their ammunition lasted and then attempted to escape by means of their boats, but these were unwieldy, the water low, and the force too much weakened to use their boats available.

Unable to escape or to defend themselves, they were compelled to surrender. Brandt, who commanded the Indians, put a stop to the slaughter. The total number was thirty-eight, among them being Col Laughery. The rest were taken prisoners to several Indian towns, thence to Detroit and from there to Montreal, where most of them were kept in captivity until the ratification of peace between the United States and Great Britain, Jan. 20, 1783. So far as history records the attack of Col. Laughery and his men was the end of trouble within the borders of Dearborn county, which originally included also what is now Ohio county. Settlers being assured of safety soon began to occupy the fertile valleys along Laughery and other streams with little fear of molestation.

Cost of Primary Election.

County Clerk W. R. Rogers rendered to the State the following account of the cost of the recent primary election in this county:

Clerk's Cost	$41.25.
Printing	5.00
21 Ballot Boxes	72.00.
Ballot books, etc	54.23.
Election Officers	131.80
Rooms for Election	20.00
Total	$321.28.

The cost of ballot boxes will not show in the itemized account of the next primary election, hence it will not be so expensive as was the last election.

The Auditor of Public Accounts sent the above account back to the Clerk and informed him that the county must pay it.

Bond Fixed at $100.

The examining trial of Isaacs, who used his knife on Tom Finnell, at Big Bone Springs a few Sundays since, was held before County Judge Cason, last Thursday morning. There were several witnesses in the case. Isaacs was held over to the next grand jury, his bond being fixed at $100 by the court.

John L. Jones, of Landing, came up last Monday to intercede in behalf of Isaacs and it was finally decided by the authorities to give Isaacs a trial, which was done and he was fined $20 and cost, amounting in the aggregate to $33.50. When Isaacs left town he said "I will be a d—d old man before I come back to Burlington again." Isaac's continued absence will not be annoying to any person in Burlington.

The meanness to which men will stoop for the sake of a little material gain is almost beyond belief. Agents of Chicago humane societies have lately discovered that it is a regular practice among horse dealers to put out the eyes of horses, in order to sell them under a guarantee that they will not shy or run away. They pass a needle thru the eye in a way that leaves no scar. To all appearances the horse is sound, but he will never see again. The condition is especially common among peddlers horses, for peddlers must have an animal that will stand. In one day the agents found fifty horses thus blinded.

Palmer-Berkshire Marriage.

One of the most charming weddings ever witnessed in the Petersburg Christian church took place at 8:15 o'clock Thursday evening, Sept. 4th, when Miss Melicent Berkshire, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ben Berkshire, became the bride of Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Palmer, of Auborn, Indiana.

Friends of the bride had decorated the church most artistically, and one could almost hear the chimes of the tiny wedding bells everywhere in evidence.

The wedding party entered to the sweet strains of Lohengrin's march and made a very rainbow of color in the dimly lighted church. First came Miss Lelia Thompson in pale blue crepe de chine and shadow lace, and Miss Lucile Berkshire in charmense and chiffon of the same hue, followed by Miss Ruth Fuller, a college friend of the bride, and Miss Helen Crisler, a cousin of Brooklyn, N. Y., in yellow crepe de chine; then came Misses Maude Asbury and Marietta Stephens in lavendar chiffon over crepe de chine. All carried pink roses.

The ushers were, Messrs. Fred Yager, Arthur Shooey, Morris Taylor, Ber. Keim, Robert Berkshire and Ralph Sams, all D. K. E. fraternity brothers of the groom, except the bride's brother, Robert.

Miss Margaret Roberts, of Louisville, another college friend of the bride, maid of honor, beautifully gowned in pink crepe metear and and lace, carrying pink roses, preceded the bride and her father, who were met at the altar by the groom and his best man, Mr. Sidney Graeff. The bride was never more beautiful than in her gown of cream white satin and brocade, entrain, a filmy veil of manne falling about her piquant face. The Episcapalian ring service was impressively read by Rev. Edgar DeWitt Jones, formerly pastor here, but now of the Christian church, Bloomington, Ill.

Immediately following the ceremony a reception was given to the young friends and relatives at the home of the bride. To the discomfiture of the prankishly inclined, the happy couple stole away in an auto before supper was served, only notifying the parents and a few intimate friends. They went to Oxford, Ohio, for a few days, leaving Tuesday for a two weeks' trip in Michigan, after which they will be at home to their many friends in Oxford, where Mr. Palmer has engaged a cottage for the present term at Miami, he being a senior there this year.

The numerous handsome gifts received from far and near testify to the widespread popularity of the young people. Others present from out of town were, Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Palmer, father and mother of groom; Mr. and Mrs. Harry Jones, of Versailles, Ind.; Messrs. Anderson, Wolf and Gard friends of the groom; Mrs. Roberts, of Louisville; Mrs. Melicent Berkshire, of Brooklyn, N. Y., grandmother of bride; Mrs. Edgar DeWitt Jones, of Bloomington, Ill.; Miss Irene Fisher, Mrs. Larimer, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Louis Hodell, Mr. and Mrs. Nat Squibb, Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Ludewig and Miss Laura Jean and Wymond French, of Lawrenceburg, Indiana; Mrs. Frank Smith and sons, Mr. and Mrs. Clifton Voris, Mr. and Mrs. J. I. Smith, Mr. George Bohanon and Miss Martha Bush, of Aurora, Ind; Mrs. Elizabeth Bush, of Covington.

Waived An Examination.

Lou Phelps, who killed Zuehl at Taylorsport about two weeks ago had his examining trial set for last Thursday, but when it was called Phelps waived an examination and Judge Cason fixed his bond at $1,000 for his appearance at the next term of the Boone circuit court. Phelps is represented by the law firm of Clore, Dickerson & Clayton, of Cincimati. Quite a number of persons from Taylorsport and vicinity were in the court room when the case was called, and some of them appeared considerably disappointed because the witnesses were not called to testify.

Phelps was released from jail last Saturday afternoon, his bond having been signed by J. C. Gordon, Harvy McGlasson, Geo. McGlasson, L. H. Sprague, Manlius Goodridge, Chas. Hempfling, S. U. Goodridge, Frank McGlasson.

DIES SUDDENLY.

Noah Clore Passes Away at the Home Of His Daughter Near Town.

Noah Clore, youngest son of the late Churchwell Clore, was found dead in his bed at the home of his daughter, Mrs. A. L. Nichols one mile out on the East Bend road at the early hour last Tuesday morning. About ten days ago Mr. Clore was brought from a hospital in Covington to the home of his daughter, and at that time it was thought he was in a precarious condition with chronic gastritis but Monday night he told Mr. Nichols that he was feeling better than for some time. No one was in the sick room after about two o'clock at night until an early hour when Mrs. Nichols went in and discovered that her father had passed away, seemingly without a struggle. The deceased was 60 years old on the second day of last August, and is survived by a widow who was Miss Mollie Eilch, of Big Bone, one daughter, Mrs. A. L. Nichols, and three brothers, Henry, Charles and William. Burial today, Thursday, at 10 a. m. in Odd Fellows cemetery.

Slightly Misjudged.

The Washington Times, Frank A. Munsey's Bull Moose paper, has been universally fair, and often partial to the Democratic Administration, while the same cannot be said of the other journals in Washington. Under the head of "New View of Bryan" it published the following editorial this week:

President Wilson, when he was considering material for his Cabinet, was strenously urged by many people who would have been glad to see his Administration fail, to reject Bryan as a Cabinet possibility. They urged that Mr. Bryan was by profession a bull in a china shop, and that the Administration dishes would be wrecked instantur if he were admitted. Nay, worse; the more ardent of these advisers assured the President that if Mr. Bryan got into the Cabinet he would be his Benedict Arnold; he would plot the failure of the Administration, would secretly work to defeat its program, and would try to undermine his chief. Mr. Bryan went into the Cabinet, and when tariff came along it was announced by these same Bryan opnobes that this was where the war would open. Bryan would smash everything and wreck the legislation. Instead, Mr. Bryan has modestly and decently supported the Administration thruout and been of vast assistance to it. But on currency—why, "everybody" knew that Mr. Bryan was so insane that "nobody" could satisfy him. He would surely pitch a monkey wrench into the works of the machine when currency came to consideration. Whereupon Mr. Bryan writes a letter that not only supports the Administration but serves as an opiate to the raging insurgents who believed they would surely have Bryan's support! Apparently Mr. Bryan was slightly misjudged by the critics who felt so worried about the china. Will the tories never realize that it is useless to try convincing this country that he is either a faker, a fraud, or a traitor?

It is said that Judge Lassing will resign from the Court of Appeals bench this week. It is further reported that he may become a candidate for postmaster at Newport. Wouldn't this be a climbing down?—Georgetown Times.

Several silos in this neighborhood were filled last week. The silo is being recognized as the best friend of the farmer from a food standpoint, and in a few years nearly every farm in this part of the county will have one or more of them.

With Congress in session all summer and Mexico on the rampage President Wilson has been a busy man notwithstanding the excessive heat that has prevailed since the early days of June, and he does not have any idea when he will get rid of either the bloody Mexican or the windy Congressmen. He is in the middle of very unsavory conditions, but he appears to be equal to the task he has before him.

WHERE EVERYBODY WILL BE NEXT SATURDAY.

PAVILION AT HARNEST HOME GROUNDS.

The Harvest Home will be held at its grounds between Hebron and Limaburg, next Saturday. This is the last outing of any consequence of this year in this part of the country, and a very large proportion of the population of the county and many from the adjoining counties will be on hand to enjoy the occasion. The young people who enjoy dancing will be out in force and will put in the day tripping the light fantastic, while the older persons will view the numerous exhibits with pleasure while occasionally meeting an old friend whom they have not seen in many years. The Harvest Home is an event that is looked forward to by both the young and old as it has features of pleasure that are not found at any of the fairs or other large gatherings during the year. The Boone county adult who fails to attend the Harvest Home misses half of the enjoyment of the year, so you would better be on hand at an early hour next Saturday morning and stay late.

Tiring of waiting for a traction road the enterprising citizens of Rising Sun went to work and installed a good water system and an electric light plant. The Sunners were determined to be up-to-date in some respects at least.

If all the dogs in Kentucky were assessed and the tax collected on them there would be money enough coming from that source to pay for all the sheep killed each year by the dogs and enough left to give the school fund a big boost, but the millennium will dawn before that happens.

The past two weeks have impaired the quality of the growing tobacco crop materially, and what at one time looked like being a good crop has been turned into a sorry crop, and those who have anything like a fair quality of the weed are sure to realize a big price therefor, and it may be that the price will balance the loss in quality.

In the current issue of the Farm and Fireside appears the record of a White Leghorn hen in New England weighing three pounds This hen laid in one year 257 eggs weighing on an average 13 ounces each. The eggs sold for $7.43, and the hen ate 110 pounds of feed, at a cost of $1.56, or a return over the cost of feed of $5.77. The same hen laid 290 eggs in her second year.

In a few years the farmers in this part of the country can not rely on springs for water for their livestock, and they will have to begin sinking wells to supply them. Every year it seems to take less dry weather than it did the preceding year to exhaust the springs. The wise farmer will take advantage of the lesson that is being taught annually and prepare for the trouble that is not far in the future.

Burlington Masonic Lodge had an interesting meeting last Saturday night at which Attorney Sidney Gaines was instructed in the mysteries of the sublime degree of a Master Mason. Mr. J. T. Craven, of near Florence, was in Burlington, Monday, and left an advertisement of his personal property which will be sold at public sale at his place on the Burlington and Florence pike, on Saturday, Sept. 20. See ad. in another column. Mr. Craven passed his 80th birthday last month and is sprightly for a man of his age. He will move to Erlanger where he expects to make his home.

Last Saturday afternoon as Richard Marshall and three ladies, Mrs. Nannie Maurer, Miss Maude Pope and a lady relative of theirs from Missouri, were passing through town in a buggy, the horse attached to the conveyance stepped on a hoop lying in the street in front of the post-office. The hoop struck the animal on the leg and it began kicking in a furious manner, but was soon thrown to the ground in some manner, and when it gained its feet its head was between the cross bar in the shafts and the front axle, the front wheels being raised high in the air. Fortunately the occupants of the vehicle all escaped without injury.

SHADE FOR CHICKENS

Many Chicks Are Victims of Sunstroke or Apoplexy.

Natural Shelter Is Best Because It Is Usually Formed by Trees and Bushes, Permitting Free Movement of Air.

(By PROF. JOHN WILLARD BOLTE.)

Chickens are probably less well able to stand the extremes of heat than any of our domestic animals, because they do not sweat to any great extent, hence are deprived of that safety valve that all of the domesticated animals possess. It is undoubtedly true that the chicken's comb and wattles serve to cool off its blood to a very marked degree, but even they will not avail in very hot weather and shade of some kind must be always available.

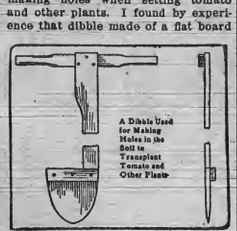
This is especially true with baby chicks, as they cannot stand the direct rays of the summer sun nearly as well as the other fowl can. Many chicks are victims of sunstroke or apoplexy every year, and it is usually the strongest and best developed ones that are overcome.

Natural shade is best of all because it is usually formed by trees and high bushes, sufficiently distant from the ground to permit free movement of air and the sun can get around to disinfect the ground at certain times. By all means have your hen coops, brooders and colony coops located in the shade during the middle of the day.

If there is no shade available in the yard where the baby chicks run, it will be necessary to provide some. A mighty good scheme is to build a frame about two feet off the ground and cover it with four inches of sod or a foot of straw, weighted down. This heavy thick roof prevents the radiation of heat from its under surface and is quite waterproof, thus having the advantage of boards or canvas.

The ground under this shelter should be dry and dusty and the little fellows will spend the long, hot noontime hours resting in the cool and dusting themselves.

With the older chickens, the problem is fully as serious and shade must be provided. This is sometimes done by raising the floor of the hen house a couple of feet above the ground, but this plan is objectionable because of its cost and the fact that the hens lay in this scratching compartment and rats harbor there.



An orchard forms the very best location for the chicken park, as the trees furnish shade and damaged or decayed fruit, while the hens eat the tree insects and enrich the soil. For the backyard flock of hens, either sun-flowers or sweet corn will provide plenty of shade if planted thickly and early.

The hen house is usually of little value for shade within, because the roof is too low and the breeze cannot blow directly through. If cross ventilation is provided and there is an air space or straw loft under the roof, little outside shade needs to be provided. Wherever possible, have the house so located that there is room for the chickens to get in the shade on any side of it, out of doors.

HOME-MADE GARDEN DIBBLE

Experiences Teaches That Implement Made of Flat Board Works Well and Leaves Clean Hole.

A dibble made of a round and sharp-pointed stick is the usual tool for making holes when setting tomato and other plants. I found by experience that dibble made of a flat board would work much better and leave a cleaner hole if worked into the earth with a horizontal swinging motion, says a writer in the Popular Mechanics. The hole produced in just right for the plant. The illustration shows its construction.

A Dibble Used for Making Holes in the Soil to Transplant Tomato and Other Plants

Summer Pruning of Peaches.

Summer pruning should never be severe, however, for top growth and root growth are interdependent and in a well-rooted tree, and severe cutting would throw its root system out of balance and hold the tree back. A good top and plenty of dark green foliage are essential to healthy growth.

The work of summer pruning is so easily done that it is a temptation to go at the young and tender wood with the hands alone, but there is danger of skinning down from the broken twig a shoot. A pair of clippers such as one uses in pruning vines is safer.

Skim Milk an Asset.

Dairying provides the cheapest way of raising one's meat on the farm. Pigs, calves and lambs can be raised cheaply on skim milk a little grain and pasture. Every farm where young animals are raised should have plenty of milk and a good pasture.

LARGE ALFALFA SEED YIELD

One Plant Made Exceptionally Fine Growth of Leafy Stems—Soil Conditions Important.

(By P. H. BLINN, Colorado Agricultural College.)

A fine alfalfa plant, after running the gauntlet of a hundred thousand visitors, many of whom examined the pods, "to see if the seed had filled," and being shipped three times across the state by a local freight or express, and then traveling over nearly all the railroads of the state with the demonstration train, yielded 92.8 grams of clean seed, equivalent to 3¼ ounces of seed from the one plant.

The plant was found in a field of Baltic alfalfa, grown at the experiment station at Rocky Ford, the field was sown in 1911 in twenty-inch rows for seed production, the field was not irrigated during the year 1911, and was left to grow seed, the season was favorable for seed yield, and the field averaged less than fifty pounds of seed to the acre, yet this one plant, in the midst of the field surrounded by thousands of plants under the same conditions which failed to produce seed satisfactorily, made an exceptional growth of fine leafy stems and set such an enormous yield of seed.

Sixty grams of the seed from this plant have been used to seed a tenth-acre plot for increase at Rocky Ford, and also a row in the comparative nursery test that comprises other choice selections. Thirty grams of the seed have been sent to the station at Fort Collins to test out in that section of the state.

The work of selecing choice individual plants is resulting in a decided improvement of the type of alfalfa, not only for seed alone, but fine quality and a large production of forage.

The question of seed production seems to depend on more care in selecting soil conditions adapted to regulating moisture supply so as to make a slow dwarfed growth, yet insuring moisture to set and fill the seed.

MACHINE FOR CRUSHING OATS

Feed Bill May Be Materially Reduced by Use of Device—Operated by Electric Motor.

The feed bill of the man who keeps five, ten, or more horses can be materially reduced and the animals kept in better flesh by the use of an oat crusher to prepare a part of the horses' fare, is the assertion of those who have tried it, says the Popular Electricity.

The machine shown will clean and crush 2,200 pounds of oats per hour, enough to feed 125 horses eighteen pounds per day. The crushed oats retain their original moisture when prepared as used, and are more completely and readily digested and the looks and condition of the animals are better with less feeding. It is claimed that a fifteen per cent saving is made over the old way of feeding whole oats, which, if a horse were accustomed to a diet of eighteen pounds of whole oats per day, would amount to a bout 30 bushels a year using crushed oats. The crusher is operated by electric motor power which is, therefore, easily applied and shut off.

Oat Crusher.

MIXED DIET FOR THE HOGS

Corn Alone Is Not Nearly as Good as When Supplemented by Some Other Protein Food.

The investigators at the Missouri college of agriculture prove again what good feeders already know, that corn—good corn—is a good feed for any animal and that there is no need of withholding it from any animal needing food. At the same time, it is shown that corn alone is not nearly so good or profitable a feed as corn supplemented by some protein food, such as tankage, linseed oilmeal or soy-beans.

In hogs fed exclusively on corn the animal becomes very fat and chubby and does not develop properly; the bones are brittle and easily broken.

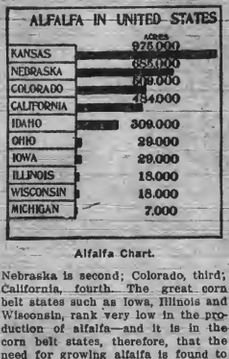
Sixty-five hogs were used in this experiment and they were divided into lots of five each. Twelve different rations were used with corn alone in two of them and corn supplemented with some other feed in the others.

The hogs fed on corn and linseed oilmeal and those fed on tankage gained the most; those receiving corn alone were most unsatisfactory.

Salt for Cows.

When cows are salted only once a week, they eat too much at a time, and it causes looseness of the bowels. They will eat a little salt nearly every day if it is kept where they can get at it, especially when the grass is fresh and abundant.

Confidence Essential.



The cow cannot do her best unless she has confidence in her owner.

ALFALFA IN UNITED STATES

Great Corn Belt States Rank Very Low in Production of Crop—Kansas Easily Leads.

Only about 5,000,000 acres of alfalfa are grown in the United States today, as compared with about 50,000,000 acres of timothy and clover—46,000,000 acres of wheat, and more than 100,000,000 acres of corn. Of the 5,000,000 acres under alfalfa, only 218,000 acres of this crop is grown east of the Mississippi river.

As you will note by referring to the chart, nearly 1,000,000 acres of alfalfa, or one-fifth of the entire area, is grown in the state of Kansas alone. In the rank of states growing alfalfa, Alfalfa Chart.

Nebraska is second; Colorado, third; California, fourth. The great corn belt states such as Iowa, Illinois and Wisconsin, rank very low in the production of alfalfa—and it is in the corn belt states, therefore, that the need for growing alfalfa is found to be the most urgent.

CULL OUT NEEDLESS ROOSTER

Agricultural Department Urges Marketing of Male Birds Soon as Hatching Season Is Over.

It has been estimated that one-third of the loss from bad eggs in the United States is due to blood rings, which are a certain stage of chick development in the egg. It takes a fertile egg to develop a blood ring, and the egg does not necessarily have to be under a setting hen or in the incubator for several days, as blood rings will begin to develop in an unheated room during hot summer weather.

Blood rings cannot be produced in an infertile egg, no matter how long the incubation, and infertile eggs can only be produced by hens which are not allowed to run with male birds. The roosters are responsible for the egg loss due to blood rings, and do it by putting fertility into the eggs. There is no good reason why the roosters should be with the hens after the breeding season is over. It has been found by numerous experimenters that hens lay better during the summer when they are not annoyed by the attentions of the rooster.

The United States department of agriculture says that if farmers and others engaged in the production of eggs would market their male birds as soon as the hatching season is over, a large saving would be made, as practically every infertile egg would grade first or second if clean and promptly marketed. The thing to do then is to sell off the cockerels and pen up the breeding males, so that the hens will be alone during the summer.

FEW TROUBLES FOR THE COLT

Veterinarian of Idaho Station Gives Remedy for Navel-Ill—Diarrhea and Rupture Cures.

(By E. T. BAKER, Veterinarian Idaho Experiment Station.)

Navel-ill is a serious disease of the new born. It is nothing but a form of blood poison, the germs getting in through the navel. The cord is rather short, and is first noticed to be of a dark purplish color with yellow pus. The joints begin swelling, and the colt soon dies unless promptly attended to. Disinfect the navel at once with a good caustic antiseptic and change the location of the mare and colt. Give colt a tablespoonful castor oil with a little spirits camphor, about a half teaspoonful. If a veterinarian is called, which will always pay in the long run, he will give both local and general treatment in the form of vaccines.

Diarrhea is another frequent trouble. The mother's milk is often the cause. See that she is not overheated or chilled. Give the mare four ounces of sodium thiosulphate in a bran mash once daily for three days, and milk her out well. Give the colt two tablespoonfuls castor oil and one tablespoonful brandy in two raw eggs.

Rupture is also rather common. These often disappear without attention. Place the colt on its back and return rupture. Apply a strong blister, and bandage for an hour or so each day.

Keeping Home Canner Going.

Can all of your surplus fruits and vegetables. There is a ready and sure market for all this class of vegetables that you wish to dispose of this winter. Keep the home canner going. The best prices will be gotten this winter, therefore cater to the local markets, and hold your canned fruits and vegetables until the winter months arrive.

Important Factor.

The digestibility of food is a most important factor to be considered in determining its value.

OATS AND BARLEY STUBBLE

Land Should Be Plowed in August to Allow Sufficient Time for the Weeds to Rot.

If the oats and barley land is to be drilled to grain in the fall, it should be plowed in August to give time for the weeds to rot and the ground to settle, says a writer in the Baltimore American. If the ground is dry and so hard as to make it impossible to plow, put three horses in the sulky cultivator. A better implement is the steel cutaway disk. Set the teeth to run deep and cut the ground over. By harrowing the field lengthwise and then across, most of the weeds can be turned under and the hard surface broken up, making it much easier to plow as soon as the August rains set in. The stubble and weeds should be plowed under and not burnt, as these, when rotted, add to the fertility of the soil and tend to make it capable of holding more moisture. Long stalk or strawy manure should either be spread evenly over the field and plowed under or used as a top dressing after the grain is drilled in. If the manure is rotted and fine, spread it on top of the plowed ground and harrow it in as soon as spread. The quickest and most economical method is to use a spreader, as it can then be spread evenly and just the right quantity to the acre. One of the great advantages in the use of the spreader is in cutting up the lumps and strawy portions as it is being spread. Two men with a two-horse spreader will haul and spread more manure than four men will spread from wagon or cart. The manure should not be put out in little piles, but spread direct from the wagon and harrowed into the top soil before it dries. There is then no loss of fertility.

DAMAGE BY ALFALFA WEEVIL

Larvae From Eggs Laid in Stems of Plants Work Much Injury by Feeding Upon the Buds.

Although in the middle west no more harming insect has yet caused widespread damage, Utah farmers have a serious pest to contend with known as the alfalfa weevil. It made its first appearance in 1907, coming from Europe. The adult weevil is a hard shelled beetle, about 3-16 inch long, brown in color with a darker stripe down the back. It lives over winter in sheltered places much the same as chinch bugs and in the early spring lays its eggs in the alfalfa stems. The larvae from these eggs do the damage by feeding upon the buds for a period of about six weeks if unmolested.

Adult Male of the Alfalfa Weevil, Greatly Enlarged.

Control methods recommended by the Utah station include keeping the alfalfa growing rapidly in the spring by disking or spring toothing, removing the first crop as soon as serious injury occurs, followed with thorough spring tooth and brush dragging, and rotation of alfalfa every four or five years. As with chinch bugs it is advisible to keep out of the way places clean of sheltering grass and refuse and securing the co-operation of whole communities in fighting the pest.

Horses for Deep Plowing.

Deep plowing is essential to good farming to increase fertility and moisture for better crops. Heavy draft horses, says the Live Stock Journal, are the first essential for deep plowing and big loads. Deep and shallow plowing has had a long time controversy and the deep plowing has won the victory for better farming by the scientific experts at the agricultural colleges, and farmers who have good draft-horse teams plow deep, and the farmers with light scrub teams must still skim along and put up with light crops until they can get the heavy draft teams that can pull a big 16-inch plow down to the beam that will produce big crops.

A Stitch in Time.

Don't forget to fix the fences. A trip around the pasture and field fences now and then will often save trouble, strength, and the time of having to drive the cattle back into the pasture. Animals are almost human when it comes to going where some one does not want them. Remove the suggestion, therefore, by not allowing any sags in the wire or any loose or decayed posts in the line. A well-kept fence is an indication of a good farmer.—C. P. Bull, Associate in Farm Crops, University Farm, St. Paul.

Feeding Effects Wool.

Proper and intelligent feeding adds to the quality of every kind of live stock or product the feeder may have to put on the market. Even the wool that comes from the back of the sheep is good, bad or indifferent, according to the manner in which it has been fed.

Keeping Grain Land Busy.

The waste land lying idle after the wheat, rye, oats, potatoes and corn are harvested is craving for something to produce. A good seeding of winter vetch, crimson or rape will improve the soil and give early pastures.

FEEDING THE CANAL ZONE

by E. W. PICKARD

SCENE AT CRISTOBAL

Colon, C. Z.—In writing or talking about the Panama Canal the superlative degree is very likely to be over worked. The canal itself is the biggest thing of the kind ever undertaken; the locks are unequalled in size; the work of the department of sanitation is the most remarkable ever carried out, and so it goes.

But there is one other feature of the building of the canal that calls loudly for the superlative degree—the commissary department and the way in which it has fed the Zone. Not fed it only, either, but largely clothed it and supplied it with household necessities and even luxuries.

The commissary department is a department of the Panama railroad, which is owned by the United States and of which Chairman Goethals is president. As officially stated:

"The commissary department of the Panama railroad is operated by the subsistence department of the Isthmian Canal commission for the purpose of supplying employes of the Panama railroad and Isthmian Canal commission and their families with foodstuffs, wearing apparel and household necessities, and also supplying food for the hotels, hospitals, messes, and kitchens operated by the Isthmian Canal commission and for the United States soldiers and marines located on the Isthmus of Panama, and ships of the United States navy. It is estimated that the department supplies about 70,000 people daily, computing one dependent for each employe.

"The business of the department for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1912, was $6,703,355.88, to transact which it is necessary to carry a stock valued at about $1,000,000."

That sounds decidedly prosaic, but in truth the operations of this great business machine are almost romantic. The vessels of the Panama railroad in unending procession bring to the docks at Cristobal the vast bulk of supplies and as continually these are sent out to the score of stores maintained by the department along the route of the canal and at Porto Bello. Every evening each storekeeper telegraphs to the headquarters in Cristobal the list of supplies of which he is in need, and during the night the cars are loaded. At 3:45 o'clock each morning the long supply train starts out from Colon. It consists of 21 cars, 11 of which are refrigerated, and the food and ice are distributed along the route so that they may be delivered to the quarters of families by 8 o'clock.

In Cristobal is the biggest store of all, and it compares well with the huge department stores of American cities. There may be obtained all kinds of food stuffs, American and European; clothing for men and women; furniture, household wares, supplies for travelers, cigars and cigarettes—indeed almost anything one might call for except intoxicating drinks. Articles from foreign lands, being imported by the government itself, of course pay no duty, and consequently such things as fine English chinaware can be bought there at prices far below those charged in the states. It is said on the isthmus, and generally believed, that the members of congressional junketing parties which from time to time go down to inspect the canal always carry home with them a lot of this choice porcelain.

At the head of the commissary department is the subsistence officer, Col. Eugene Wilson, whose huge physical bulk is well matched by his great executive ability. It would seem that no better man could possibly have been found for the position, for he has in hand every detail of the immense business and it runs like clockwork. Seldom is a complaint heard from even the most exacting of housewives, and when one is registered it is courteously received and the fault, if one exists, promptly rectified.

"Cleanliness before godliness every time" is Colonel Wilson's motto and though it is not posted on any wall, every employe understands that his job depends primarily on his cleanliness. In Cristobal are the great cold storage plant, bakery, coffee plant, ice plant, ice cream plant, corned beef plant, butter printing plant and laundry, and in every one of them the unwritten rule "be clean" is adhered to with the utmost care. Nowhere, if it can be avoided, is there personal contact with the food, and the numerous and ingenious automatic machines are kept scrupulously clean.

Now [illegible] in order to obtain some idea of the [illegible] operations of the commissary department [illegible] on a business basis [illegible] stances much more. Hanging in long rows in the icy cold rooms are the carcasses of 400 beeves and hogs and sheep in due proportion. In other rooms, not so cold, are 150 tons of potatoes, and vast quantities of onions, turnips, beets, carrots, cabbages, yams, celery, tomatoes and other vegetables. In yet other rooms are ten tons of poultry, and elsewhere are boxes of fruit without number. And this enormous supply is daily depleted and daily renewed.

Adjoining the cold storage plant is the bakery, in whose immense ovens are baked each working day about 30,000 loaves of bread, 2,300 rolls and 380 pounds of cake. The coffee department, which roasts and sends out about 300,000 pounds of the roasted berry each year, receives the especial attention of Colonel Wilson, for he is himself a great coffee drinker. He personally makes up the formulas for the blends, and as something of a coffee connoisseur myself, I can testify that he knows what he is about when he does it.

The people of the zone, white and black alike, are very fond of ice cream, and to supply the demand the commissary manufactures about 140,000 gallons a year, of three grades. The first grade is as good ice cream as one can get anywhere, and even the third grade is mighty welcome after a hot day in the Culebra Cut or the Pedro Miguel locks.

Are you tired [illegible] yet? If not, please consider that the ice plant at Cristobal makes nearly 40,000 tons of ice a year, the corned beef plant has an annual output of about 270,000 pounds, and that almost 385,000 pounds of butter is handled by the butter printing plant, all of the butter being brought from the United States. Then we will move to the laundry. In this spacious building, with its long rows of washing machines and drying and froning devices, all the laundry work of the Zone, excepting that of the Ancon hospital, is done, and in addition that of all the steamship lines running to Colon except one. "We are now handling," said the manager, "an average of about half a million pieces a month, and in the months when the tourists come in greatest numbers the figures mount to about 800,000."

The figures I have been giving are approximate only, for they are changing continually with changing conditions. Here is a list of some of the more important importations of food products during the last fiscal year:

	Pounds.
Peas and beans in bulk	1,765,068
Sugar	4,164,537
Tea	104,205
Preserved fruit in syrup in tins and glass	857,172

Apples	916,922

As will be readily understood, the commission is able and willing to sell food at very little above cost. Consequently the housewife on the isthmus can buy at prices that are never above those in the states, and that nearly always are considerably lower.

An important part of the commissary plant is the industrial and experimental laboratory in Cristobal, where all the foods are tested and many things, such as flavoring extracts, are manufactured.

The commission conducts more than a dozen hotels for white Americans, where good meals are furnished for 35 cents each; a score of mess halls for European laborers, where a day's board costs forty cents, and about twenty-five kitchens for West Indian laborers, where board costs thirty cents a day. Something like a million meals are served each month in these various establishments, for nearly every employe of the commission eats at a government table. It has been said that no private contractor in the world feeds his employes as well as the Isthmian canal commission. Very few of the men ever eat better meals than they are getting on the isthmus, and this is true of the Americans as well as of the Spaniards and West Indians.

FRIENDS OF MANKIND

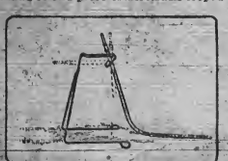
Feathered Creatures of Greatest Benefit to Farmers.

Every Songster That Lives on Insect Life Is Worth Its Weight in Gold —Should Be Encouraged in the Gardens.

Few persons actually realize the great good accomplished by many of the more common varieties of insect destroying birds. Every bird that lives on insect life is worth its weight in gold to mankind, declares Harper's Weekly. In most localities these useful birds have been so destroyed as to be almost exterminated, and the increase of destructive insects that frequent the field, orchard and garden is appalling. Something will have to be done soon or mankind will be confronted with a very difficult problem.

The natural means of exterminating these pests are by far the best. The birds are the natural enemies of the life that destroys and injuries the various crops. Why not assist the willing birds in this work? We can easily do so if we but stop and consider for a moment. Instead of depleting the flocks of bluebirds, wrens and purple martins, encourage them to inhabit your lawns, gardens and orchards.

Erect homes for the birds. The little common house wren that is always busy either in winter or summer in catching thousands of insects or feeding on their larvae will greatly appreciate a little effort on our part to provide them shelter. Tin cans, old coffee pots or small wooden boxes fastened on fences, outbuildings, arbors or trees, and provided with entrances about the size of a half-dollar, will make cozy homes for the wren, and the number of young hatched and fed with the pests in the garden will insure a greater quality and better quality of fruits and vegetables.



The bluebird is another enemy of the hundreds of insects that get in their wicked work in the early spring and summer, when bloom and tender fruits are exposed to their ravages. They can be induced to remain about our homes if provided with suitable roosting and nesting boxes. The type of home may vary, but it should not be too large, and more than one should be erected about the home, especially in the orchard. A box not more than twelve by eighteen inches, divided into four rooms, with an opening into each room and a narrow ledge or alighting-board is the most easily provided. It should be placed on a pole about twelve or fifteen feet high. It might be well to have the pole attached to a fence post or some other handy place, by a hinge so the box can be lowered when it is necessary to clean it out or remove the English sparrows.

The purple martin is one of our greatest sectivorous birds. It is an annual visitor, arriving about the first of April. It never nests in trees. It prefers some well sheltered home, and one that is out of reach of the cats. Many years ago martin boxes were quite common, and great colonies were seen each year. But during the last quarter of a century the martin has been neglected, and one can travel for miles without seeing a birdhouse. Every farmer, and, in fact, every owner of a home, should assist in reclaiming these birds. Erect homes for them. A great variety of houses can be built. Any one can secure a box from the grocer, cut a couple of small holes in it, and place it on a pole not far from the house. Many of pretty designs can be built that will not only serve a good purpose, but make the home more attractive. The martin loves to be noticed and talked to, and it will repay one for his trouble in its cheery warble, and in time its presence will be shown in the quantity and quality of the products injured by the insect pests.

To Propose New Law.

Forfeiture of office will be the penalty imposed in this state if the corrupt practices act, which is being prepared by Attorney-General James Garnett, is passed by the next Legislature. The bill is being prepared by Garnett at the request of several men who will be in the Legislature, and is patterned after the Federal law. In speaking of the measure Garnett says: "Candidates should be limited in expenditures to an amount sufficient to cover the legitimate expenses of the campaign, and any successful candidate in whose behalf a corruption fund was used shall forfeit his nomination or office, and it shall go to the next highest vote in whose behalf no corruption fund was used."

Nervous?

Mrs. Walter Vincent, of Pleasant Hill, N. C., writes: "For three summers, I suffered from nervousness, dreadful pains in my back and sides, and weak sinking spells. Three bottles of Cardui, the woman's tonic, relieved me entirely. I feel like another person, now."

TAKE

Cardui

The Woman's Tonic

For over 50 years, Cardui has been helping to relieve women's unnecessary pains and building weak women up to health and strength. It will do the same for you, if given a fair trial. So, don't wait, but begin taking Cardui today, for its use cannot harm you, and should surely do you good. E-72

A treat for our readers that we have arranged for is a series of twelve illustrated articles on

The Panama Canal and the Isthmus in History and Romance

By Edward W. Pickard

Mr. Pickard is that type of globe-trotting author who seeks the quaint and curious places and people as subjects for his clever descriptive articles. In his present series of twelve articles which we have arranged to print, he has touched not only the actual work of building the canal, and the people who have accomplished it, but has gone into what the newspaper worker knows as the side lines, and which as a rule are of as much interest as the main story. This is particularly true in this case. After our readers have completed the last of Mr. Pickard's articles they will have a better understanding of the Panama Canal, and conditions within and surrounding the canal zone.

There was a large number of mules on the stock market and about eight car loads were shipped from there Monday night, mostly going to Pennsylvania. The best weanling mules sold at $80 but there were not many sold at that price.

The sad news reached here Sunday of the sudden death of Dr. Wm. E. Shaw at his home at Santa Rosa, Cala., he dying there Saturday. Dr. Shaw was born and reared at Alexandria, Campbell county, and was married to Miss Mollie Hughes about 1876, and their union was blessed with four children, two sons and two daughters, who have reached maturity. Dr. Shaw practiced in Cincinnati for about twenty-five years and won the reputation of being one of the most skilled physicians of that city. He was most favorably known here where he won his bride, and Dr. B. K. Menefee speaking of him said Dr. Shaw was one of the finest gentlemen he ever had the pleasure to know, being one of the cleanest men of the highest ideals. Dr. Shaw moved to California quite a number of years ago, and gave up the practice of medicine, living a quiet life in peaceful enjoyment. He was in his 68th year at the time of his demise. He had been in the garden among the flowers, and his absence being noted search was made and he was found in the garden in the cold embrace of death.

Card of Thanks—I desire to extend thanks to our many friends and relatives for the sympathy and services extended to us during the illness of our dear mother; also Bro. W. F. Wallace, for his comforting words; also to Dr. McCormic and Mr. Scott Chambers for his efficient services.

Mrs. M. Stephenson.

About 70 of the friends and relatives of E. R. Scott and wife called on them Sunday with baskets well filled to help celebrate the 40th anniversary of their wedding. After the guests had assembled it was found that Mr. Scott had only been married 38 years, but this did not detract any from the enjoyment of the day as the large crowd enjoyed themselves to the full extent.

The residents of our town were thrown into quite an excitement last Friday morning when a dark shadow was cast over the earth and drops of something that appeared to be water began to fall on frightened pedestrians. People scurried hither and thither, asking the same question until Mr. Henry Parsons appeared on the streets and quieted their fears by saying that way back in his youth the same thing happened and they called it rain. This satisfied the populace and they settled back to watch old Jupi, Pluvius pour out a generous shower of that long denied aqua pura.

Last Thursday night Eph Clore, wharfmaster, had two calves to ship. He tied them at the river and put out his red light as usual and returned to the house. About 11 o'clock hearing the boat coming, he went down to the river to see that everything was all right. On reaching the landing he rubbed his eyes, pinched himself and did numerous other stunts to see if he was awake, for the light was gone, ditto both calves, and the boat coming rapidly nearer. Looking up the hill he espied one of the calves and captured it in time to take the salve as well as the lantern, but his sudden arrival at the river frightened them away.

Mr. and Mrs. Dudley Blyth and baby, of Burlington, visited Mr. and Mrs. John M. Botts, Saturday and Sunday.

Dr. and Mrs. G. M. Terrill and children, of Lawrenceburg, visited Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Hensley, Sunday afternoon.

Miss Pauline Alden returned last Wednesday from Burlington where she was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Dudley Blyth.

Mrs. Sam Buchanan returned to her home in Batesville, Monday, after spending a few days here with Mrs. Kate McWethy.

Miss Mary Riddell returned to Akron, Ohio, Wednesday, after a month's visit here with her grandmother, Mrs. Mary Snelling.

Mrs. Mary Snyder and granddaughter, Miss Ethelyn Dodd, of Terre Haute, are spending several days in Cincinnati with Mr. and Mrs. Dave Snyder.

School opened here last week with the following teachers in charge; Miss Edwards, of Bullittsburg; Miss Mary Roberts, of Burlington; Miss Flossie Campbell, of Bullittsburg and Miss Edna Beall of Hebron.

The Epworth League elected the following new officers for the coming year; Raymond Witham, president; Beulah Witham, vice-president; Mrs. Olds, 2nd vice-president; Mary Nelson, 3rd vice; Alta Hensley, 4th vice: Agnes Thompson, treasurer; Mae Whiting, secretary.

The corner stone of the new Odd-Fellows hall was laid Sunday evening in the presence of a large crowd. Rev. Geo. C. Waggoner, of Lawrenceburg, gave an interesting talk on what the temple of Odd-Fellowship should represent. This was an event that few residents of this town had ever witneased before and it will linger in the memory of those present for a long time, especially the children as Rev. Waggoner made the service very impressive to them by showing and explaining the meaning of the little box containing the trophies, which was sealed in the corner stone.

Pepper Smith and John Maurer, of Belleview, were visitors here Saturday.

Jack Berkshire is kept busy looking after the store and the new building.

Jas. Moreland sold his house and lot to Mr. Edwards. It will be occupied by his son-in-law, Edward Moore.

D. Bondurant and family have gone to their new home at Big Bone, where his wife has secured a fall and winter school.

M. Duke & Sons are preparing to shelve and counter two of the hotel rooms for a stock of groceries and dry goods.

Recent rains have revived the pastures and gardens and furnished the community with a generous supply of water, both for house and stock.

I would be pleased to have those owing me for mowing, cleaning and filling graves on their lots, to settle on or before the 1st of October, as the cleaning season ends on that date.

NORTH BEND.

Miss Stella Brown made a business trip to Cincinnati, Thursday.

Miss Ida Green visited relatives at Riverside, Friday night and Saturday.

Mrs. Chas. Utzinger was the guest of Mrs. Dick Munts and family, Sunday.

Mr. Lewis Fogle moved from the farm of Henry Snyder to the farm of Mr. Morgan Wainscop.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Fogle and daughter were Sunday guests of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Fogle.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Ogden moved to the farm of Edna Riley, one day the past week. We are glad to have them in our neighborhood.

GOOD ROAD LEAGUE.

A meeting of the precinct committees is called to meet at Union, Friday, Sept. 19th, 1913, at 1:30 p. m. Visitors are cordially invited to be present.

M. J. Crouch, Chairman,
Walter Robinson, Secty.

Those accepting the Recorder's combination order must bear in mind that it may be several days and may be a couple of weeks before they receive the papers other than the Recorder and the Enquirer as they are monthlies and semi-monthlies.

At last accounts Reuben Hager, who had to quit the Boone County High School because of having typhoid fever, is getting along nicely.

The Kentucky banana crop is beginning to ripen.

Personal Mention.

Mrs. Chas. Goodridge is visiting relatives in Indianapolis this week.

Miss Lizzie Rogers was quite ill several days last week.

Miss Mary Thompson is visiting friends in Bullittsville neighborhood.

Garnett Tolin has been visiting in Central Kentucky for the past week.

Bert Sullivan, who has been quite ill for several days, is some better.

C. C. Hughes spent Saturday night and Sunday with home folks in Burlington.

Thos. Rouse attended the Ohio State Fair, last week. He says it was immense.

Col. G. C. Graddy, of Petersburg, was a guest at the Boone House, last Saturday night.

Atty. Geo. Enwright, of Frankfort, was a guest of Atty. Garnett Tolin several days the past week.

Frank McMullen, who has been in Denver, Colo., for several years, has gone to Los Angeles, California.

John Walton and Robert Gaines left Monday for Lexington where they will enter the State University.

Miss Pattie Revill has returned to Conway, Arkansas, where she is employed teaching music in a college.

Earl Smith, who has been considerably indisposed for two or three weeks, is on the road to recovery.

Elbert S. Ryle and wife, of Chicago, are guests of Newton Sullivan and wife out on the Petersburg pike.

Omer Porter and wife, of Cincinnati, are visiting his relatives in this vicinity. He has a ten days' furlough.

B. B. Allphin and wife of Walton, were Saturday night guests of his nephew, Sheriff R. B. Hume and wife.

After spending a few days with his aunt, Mrs. J. F. Blyth, Jerry Fowler has returned to his home in Athens, Ohio.

Eugene Long and wife, from over on Long Branch, were Sunday guests of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. R. S. Crisler.

Johnson Clore, of Indiana, was at the Harvest Home, last Saturday, where he met many of his relatives and old acquaintances.

Mrs. F. A. Hall spent several days the past week with her daughters, Mrs. H. W. Shearer, and Miss Besse Hall, of Newport.

Mrs. J. M. Lassing, of Newport, was the guest of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Brady, of Belleview precinct, several days the past week.

Rev. O. M. Huey, of Louisville, visited relatives in this county, last week, and took an active part in the proceedings of the North Bend Association of which he was a long time member, being pastor of several churches within its bounds.

Geo. Rice, of Illinois, who is visiting his relatives in this county, attended the association last week where he met many of his old acquaintances. Mr. Rice has been absent from this county for many years and was given quite a hearty reception.

Henry Hughes and wife, of Nebraska, are visiting Mr. Hughes relatives in this county. Mr. Hughes has been away from Kentucky for many years, but he does not seem to have an additional wrinkle or gray hair. He saw some of the rough side of life in Nebraska's early days, but fortune finally came his way and he is now on easy street.

Reuben Hager, son of Peter Hager, of East Bend, came to Burlington to attend the Boone Co. High School again this year. He looked badly and had not been feeling well for several days before he came, and becoming considerably worse he called a doctor who pronounced his trouble typhoid fever. Last Thursday N. B. Riddell, accompanied by Dr Carlyle and Miss Cora Aylor, professional nurse, took the young man home, making the trip in an automobile.

A good rain followed by clear weather would discount the weather experiments so far this week.

THE HARVEST HOME

Two Thousand People In Attendance Despite the Disagreeable Weather.

About 2,000 persons, young and old, passed through the entrance gates at the Harvest Home, last Saturday, notwithstanding the day was rather too cool for the occasion. While the [illegible] was about as good as we have all past, the exhibition [illegible] badly, especially in the fruit, garden products, owing to the very unfavorable weather this year. The corn show was good and so was the exhibit of poultry and dairy. The display of needle work was not so extensive as usual but it was fine what there was of it. A spread crocheted by Miss Matilda Aylor was a very excellent piece of work and attracted considerable attention and elicited many favorable comments. Mrs. Harmon Jones' baby was awarded the first premium, while Mrs. Michael's was given the second. The young people had the time of their lives on the pavilion as the day was the finest ever for tripping the light fantastic, and the musicians were allowed very little time for a rest between dances. Very often the dancers crowded the floor so there was not room for the dancing to be a pleasure.

Lassing Resigns.

Frankfort, September 13.—Judge John M. Lassing, today, handed to Governor McCreary his resignation as member of the Court of Appeals from the Sixth District. The resignation will take effect Tuesday Sept. 16th. It will be accepted and the Governor will appoint his successor, but he has not determined who will be the lucky jurist. Judge Lassing's successor will will serve by appointment until the next regular election at which State, district or county officers are elected.

Judge Lassing resigned as County Attorney to accept the appointment of Circuit Judge when Judge John W. Green, of Owenton, died; he resigned as Circuit Judge to accept the appointment as Appelate Judge when Appellate Judge Thomas H. Paynter was elected to the U. S. Senate. In each instance Judge Lassing was elected to a full term in the office to which he was appointed. Besides being one of the States most astute politicians Judge Lassing's record as a "resigner" has no equal in the history of Kentucky.

Judge Lassing had yet five years of his term to serve. He will practice law in Newport and look after his numerous and profitable interests.

Gov. McCreary appointed Judge Jeff Bion Hannah, of Sandy Hook, to fill the vacancy caused by Judge Lassing's resignation Rules of the Road.

There are some drivers of vehicles on public roads who seem to believe that because a highway is a public highway they may do as they please and nobody can interfere with them. There are others who take the middle of the road and plod along at a walk, declining to make room for other vehicles which would like to pass them. It is within the power of any citizen to prosecute any other citizen who can be proven a violator of the road law. Here is the provision of the Kentucky Road Law governing passing:

"Any driver of a vehicle meeting any other vehicle on the road or bridge shall reasonably drive to the right, if the width thereof will permit, so that they may pass each other without interference. And when a vehicle is overtaken by another vehicle the driver of which wishes to pass the other, the driver on the former, upon being informed of such desire, shall bear to the right and the driver of the latter to the left until the latter shall have passed. Any driver failing to do so shall be fined $10."

TOBACCO NEWS.

Considerable cutting has been done during the past week.

—o—o—

The estimated crop of tobacco around Hopkinsville is 50 to 60 per cent of the average.

—o—o—

In some counties in the Black Patch the crop is not expected to make more than 25 per cent of the average.

—o—o—

All over Bracken county, tobacco is being cut and housed, many believing that a rain would do it more harm than good should one come.

—o—o—

The crop in Virginia is being rapidly housed and will yield a large percentage of dark wrapper and Regie leaf. It will not be as heavy as last year.

—o—o—

From Paducah, reports are that tobacco is curing up nicely either light or brown in color. Worms are said to be scarcer than usual. More than half the crop was cut this week.

TREAT EYEGLASSES TO BATH

Occasional Washing of Spectacles Cannot Be Expected to Remove All the Dust and Grime.

Do not neglect to give your eyeglasses a bath. It will give them a surprise and will do you like the result.

Especially in hot weather, when perspiration and dust form a gummy substance on the eyelashes, the lenses of glasses or spectacles will soon become dimmed, apparently, much improvement follows giving them a thorough washing with soap and warm water, followed by drying and polishing with tissue paper. The gummy substance which collects on the lenses in hot weather cannot be removed by a mere rubbing with chamois or tissue paper, and the more humid the day, the more necessary becomes the eyeglass bath.

An oculist, who knows the importance of well washed lenses, carried in his pocket a vial of alcohol. It takes but a moment to moisten the corner of a handkerchief and remove the combination of dust and moisture upon his glasses. Another business man has the case of his glasses interlined with a folded bit of soft tissue, such as is used for copying letters in offices. This is so soft that it is easily folded into the small space of the spectacle case. No dust collects on this as it does on the velvet lining, and the tissue interlining is renewed every day or two.

James I. and Monopoly.

Soap, which the manufacturers have advanced in price by 5 shillings a hundredweight, used to provide James I. with a comfortable addition to his income, says the London Chronicle. That canny monarch granted the Company of Soapmakers of Westminster the monopoly for the making of soap in England in return for a payment of £6 per ton on all soap produced. The importation of soap was forbidden, and officers were appointed to deal with illicit soap boiling, its manufacture, even in private houses for domestic purposes, being punishable by heavy penalties. Moreover, a proclamation was issued that "the soap made by the company is good, sweet and serviceable for our people." The annual revenue derived by the king from this source amounted to about £30,000.

Passing of a Type.

The hard contemporary fact is that the gloriously named authors are becoming sadly rare, even rarer than long-haired actors. The long-haired musician is still with us, though one of the most eminent masters of the pianoforte has yielded something to the modern spirit by submitting briefly to the shears. Individual age has here a potent influence—age, or the getting through with things. What a wonderfully picturesque person Dickens was at twenty-five! And how matter-of-fact at forty! Browning suffered a similarly sobering and average effect. The same thing is true of many other figures in that period, and it is not easy to guess whether the mental fashion set in during their middle years, or whether advancing years would have effected the same change in any case.—Alexander Black, in the Atlantic.

To Make Little Folks Happy.

There may be no children in your household, but it is wise to save, nevertheless, those trifles that children love and when you have some little thing you will be able to produce those that will entertain them. It is surprising, too, how little it takes to be sure to a child. Odds and ends of ribbon, a pretty card, some [illegible] from catalogues, bits of [illegible], all will be appropriate for the purpose. [illegible] may be [illegible]

Our Fairy Godmothers.

The world, out of fairy books, is chary in furnishing its fairy godmothers, yet most of us have friends at whose touch we become more truly and happily ourselves than at other times. They seem able to endow us, through some magic of their own, with the beauteous vestments and the glass slippers that free the spirit. These are our fairy godmothers. We do well to love them and pay them good heed, for through them we may enter into such possession of the precious gifts that we need have no dread of the striking hour. This, we must suppose, is what Cophetua did for his beggar-maid. At his glance the queen in her blossomed, which later all the world could see.—From the Atlantic.

A Frontier of Peace.

With its row of crumbling forts and musty guns the frontier between Canada and the United States stands as an object lesson to all nations. While it is the longest, it is the safest and securest frontier in the world. Three thousand miles and more of it lie between Passamaquoddy bay and Puget sound, and in all that distance not a shotted gun points menacingly from either country toward the other. A few small and comparatively ineffective [illegible] guard the waterways, but [illegible] would be of much [illegible] in time of war.—St. John Telegraph.

BELGIAN FARMS SMALL

Statistics Show That Results in Agriculture Less Than an Acre in Size.

An outstanding feature of the Belgian farming is the small size of the farms. More than half of the Belgian farms are less than an acre in size.

One cause of small farms in Belgium is a law prohibiting the leaving by any man of all his property to one child. [illegible] Wallaces' Farmer. It is required that the property be divided [illegible] children. Of course the [illegible] to hold the land [illegible], but in practice the result has [illegible] subdivision of the land [illegible] of certain land [illegible] some share.

[illegible] half [illegible] and [illegible] landlord to furnish [illegible] of the fertilizer.

The average value of the Belgian land is now about $300 an acre, pasture land averaging a little more than this and cultivated land a little less. Eighty years ago Belgian land was worth just half this much.

Why is Belgian land so high? It is not so fertile as much of the land of England or Germany, yet is more valuable because there are some half million Belgians who have the ability to make $300 land bear interest on the investment. They are able to do this because they work hard and are satisfied with little. Another reason for the high price of land is the keen competition for it. Because of the small pieces into which it is divided land is constantly on the market and there are always farm hands and renters who are eager to own a piece of land for themselves, and so the price is bid up to the limit.

GIVES THEM THE WILD FLAVOR

Housekeeper Has Thought Out Particularly Clever Way of Cooking the Domestic Duck.

"I can cook the domestic duck so that you would think it was mallard!" declared a clever little housekeeper the other day.

"At any rate, you would think it was mallard if you knew the delicious and peculiar flavor of that particular bird well enough to recognize it.

"People say that this characteristic flavor is due to the fact that mallard feeds on wild celery. Well, naturally, when I buy ducks in the market it is too late to put them on a diet in the ordinary sense.

"But if I can't feed them celery while they're alive, I can do it after they're dead. Oh, yes, I can! And this is the way I manage it. Instead of stuffing them in the ordinary way, I take stalks of celery which I cut the length of the bird's inside measurement.

"I put these stalks in where the dressing ought to grow, and I then place the duck in the roasting pan. Instead of putting water in the pan, I pour in a pint bottle of moderate priced Sauterne. Maybe I put a little water in the Sauterne, but not much. Then I baste the duck with this while it is roasting. And if I can't deceive you with the result—well, your palate must have a pretty intimate acquaintance with the flavor of mallard."

More Kiss Doctrine.

One Mrs. Minnie Slentz promulgated this unorthodox doctrine in the divorce court a while ago:

"Some couples may kiss each other right up until they are sixty, in an attempt to fool themselves into thinking that their kisses have the genuine heart glow of the first month of marriage, but it is all bosh. Real kissing becomes monotonous during the second year, intermittent from the fourth to the sixth, and stops entirely before the eighth year of married life.

Can this be true? At the risk of infringing on the province of another department of this paper, we invite the opinions of our readers on this important theme. Let your answers or criticisms be brief, either in verse or prose. In the words of Wallace Irwin:

"Enough of kissing—can there be enough?"

HELP ON MANY FARMS

Besides Adding to Revenue of Farmer by Wool and Mutton, Sheep Devour Many Noxious Plants.

(By W. A. LINKLATER, Oklahoma Experiment Station.)

It would add to the revenue of many farms if a flock of sheep were kept. Besides being profitable they are great weed eaters. They will eat five out of six of the known [illegible] three or more will eat only [illegible] six.

Range-bred sheep are the right kind [illegible] the average farmer to buy. Such [illegible] Merinos and if they [illegible] of Shropshire, Lincoln [illegible] mutton blood, so much the better. It would not be advisable to buy Mexican sheep or low grade sheep of any other kind.

The ewes purchased for the foundation flock should be good, large animals from three to four years old, and weighing more than 100 pounds. Where possible it would seldom be practical to start with less than 50 ewes, and a larger number would be better still. A flock of a dozen would require almost as much [illegible] as 50 or 100. These range-bred grade Merinos should be bred to a Dorset ram if possible.

The reason we recommend buying range-bred grade Merino ewes is that thousands of these are available, while Dorsets are not to be had in large numbers.

These fall or early winter lambs, by good feeding and care can be made to weigh 90 to 100 pounds by May 1, when they will find a ready market and will always be in demand. Such lambs should bring from $5 upward.

SELECTING CORN FOR SEED

Technical Knowledge on Part of Farmer Not Necessary for Improvement of His Crop.

(By J. M. GRAY.)

The possibilities of improvement of corn by judicious selection, are very great. Ever since man has been tilling the soil, he has changed the character of plants by consciously or unconsciously making selections. The improvement of any plant is considered by most farmers a very difficult operation and one to be undertaken only by those who are qualified by natural ability and special training, to such work. Yet it does not require any technical knowledge on the part of the farmer to improve corn, for the methods of selection are very simple.

Every farmer who is growing corn should, plant some standard variety which he knows has been tested and gives the most profitable yields in his locality, and from this he should select, each year, seed that comes nearest to his ideal. It is necessary to make this selection each year because if it is not done the corn will soon revert to the original type and lose those qualities which the farmer has been striving to get.

In your selections, instead of looking for an ideal ear only, look for an ideal stalk made up of an ideal stem, of ideal foliage and of an ideal root system bearing an ideal ear or ears covered with ideal husks, and supported by an ideal shank. Possibly this will be hard to find; but you can find something which approaches it and from this, with your ideal in view, you can select continuously until you have a plant very nearly approaching that ideal.

Inferior Lambs.

Lambs of low vitality and ewes deficient in milk flow at lambing time are usually the result of improper management during the pregnant period.

DAIRY NOTES

Not all cow keepers are dairy farmers.

Warm and cold cream ought not to be mixed.

Good dairy stock show their possibilities early.

Many eastern farmers feed grain to milk cows on pasture.

Quiet and comfort are what count in dairying, and more especially in hot-weather dairying.

Successful dairying depends entirely on right methods in breeding, feeding and management.

If there is no silo on your farm, do not let another winter catch you unprepared. Make your plans right now for one.

* * *

Oftentimes the one who has dairy butter for sale must take his pay in trade, while those who sell cream get nothing but cash.

In selecting cows, all signs may fail, but the Babcock test is absolutely reliable. It will tell you whether the cows are good or not.

Which Shall Wife Wash?

Which cream separator bowl does the wife prefer to wash?

On the left are four sizes of common "bucket bowls" used in ordinary cream separators. On the right is a light, simple, Sanitary Sharples Dairy Tubular bowl of the same capacity—used only in Sharples Tubular Separators.

These illustrations were made from actual photographs. Notice the weights—count the pieces. The Sharples Tubular bowl contains but one piece, and that piece is smooth, instantly removable and about the size and shape of a napkin ring. The Tubular bowl can easily be perfectly cleaned in three minutes.

Yet makers of "bucket bowls"—barred by patents from making or using Tubular bowls—say "bucket bowls" are as easy to clean, and wear as long, as Tubular bowls.

Take another look at the picture. Show it to your wife. Which had she rather wash? Which do you think will wear the longest. We sell Sharples Tubular—the finest cream separators and surest money makers made. Bring your wife and look at one.

MEADOWLARK A PEST?

Belongs to Same Family as Blackbird and Oriole.

Amount of Damage Done by This Bird Varies With Depth of Planting, Condition of Soil and Proximity to Pastures.

(By H. C. BRYANT.)

The meadowlark is not a true lark, but belongs to the same family to which the blackbird and oriole belong. Since the meadowlark of the eastern states differs from that found in the western states in both song and coloration, the bird of the west is termed the western meadowlark. This is a common bird from Wisconsin, Illinois, Iowa, Texas, etc., west to the Pacific coast, also ranging north into Canada and south into Mexico.

The meadowlark is well known because of its size, bright plumage and cheerful song. It is a conspicuous bird of treeless areas and a frequenter of the meadow and pasture. In California it is found from sea level to altitudes of 7,000 feet in the mountains. It is most abundant in the great central valleys where, in some places, the birds may be seen congregated in flocks of fifty or more, feeding almost entirely on the ground.

This meadowlark appears to be one of the few birds which is profiting by the increased cultivation of land. Alfalfa furnishes particularly good food and cover for the bird and grain fields are often chosen for a home. With the furnishing of still more good food and cover, combined with the destruction of some of its enemies, the western meadowlark may be expected to still further increase in numbers.

Oats appear to be preferred. In the fields inspected, damage was greatest in sandy soil, for here the grain is more easily obtained. Next to the condition of the soil, the factor governing the extent of damage appears to be the proximity of the natural habitat of the bird. Fields bordering on marsh grass lands and pastures suffer most. In some instances the meadowlark have followed the drill row for distances of four to six feet and apparently pulled every sprout. Barley and wheat are attacked to a less extent than oats. Field corn and sorghum are not damaged.

Meadowlarks can succeed in pulling the sprouting grain only when it first appears above the ground. After the second and third blades appear the plant is well rooted and the kernel no longer essential to the life of the plant. Only the grain which is within one and one-half inches of the surface is obtainable. Hence the difficulty of obtaining the kernel and the termination of the time during which the kernel is essential to the life of the plant soon makes destruction impossible. Hard, dry soil precludes attack. Damage is greatest after the soil has been softened by rain. Investigation shows that fields apparently greatly damaged while the grain was sprouting have shown but little damage at harvest time. In some cases a certain amount of thinning may be beneficial so that unless the damage is great the birds may perform a real service. The fact that oats is most seriously damaged and that, with the exception of barley and wheat, other grains are not attacked also minimizes the amount of possible damage.

When the benefits conferred by the meadowlark are balanced with the injuries, there remains no doubt that the bird deserves protection. Its value as a destroyer of injurious insects far exceeds its detriment as a destroyer of sprouting grain. The value of one of these birds living to one dead is as five pounds of insects and one-half pound of weed seeds is to one and three-fourths pounds of grain, a considerable part of which is made up of wild oats and waste grain.

A strong point favoring their protection is to be found in the fact that the damage to sprouting grain fields can be largely prevented by planting grain deeply and drilling instead of broadcasting, two measures highly advocated as favoring larger crops.

When Soils Cease to Produce.

The trouble with soils when they cease to produce as they did when new is not that elements of plant food are actually exhausted from the soil, but the necessary force for the liberation are exhausted. One of these forces is bacteria. It is estimated that in the common soil there are 150,000,000 bacteria to the ounce.

These bacteria must have for their food humus, then they will liberate food for the growth of plants. To be a good farmer one needs to grow legumes and other cover crops plants to turn under for humus, and to encourage these beneficial bacteria to perform their functions in the soil.

BETTER THAN GREAT FORTUNE

Knowledge That True Athens Played the Game Fairly Is a Comforting Thing to Have.

A contributor to the American Magazine says:

"When you get up in the morning take a look in the glass. How do you look to yourself?

"If you can look yourself right in the eye and not be ashamed of anything you've done, you are far better off than many a man with lots more money than you.

"Of course, it is nice to be successful, to have money. No matter what the game is—whether it's marbles or business—it is nicer to win than to lose. Success brings happiness, but it must be real success. If you've cheated to win, you've destroyed the pleasure. There is no satisfaction in being ahead of the other fellow if down in your heart of hearts you know he is rightfully entitled to be ahead of you.

"Win if you can win fairly. The knowledge that there isn't a page in your past to which you dare not turn, that there isn't a man in the world can put his finger on any crooked thing you've done, the feeling that whatever happens you have played the game straight, is worth more than all the money and all the power and all the position in the world.

"If you are in business, no matter what the other fellow does, be content with smaller profits and a square deal. Clean money pays best. Crooked dividends bring wrinkles and worries with them.

"A good test of a business is what you are going to think of yourself afterward."

LITTLE SHORT OF MARVELOUS

Series of Miraculous Escapes From What Would Seem to Be Inevitable Death.

At Geneva recently a professional acrobat who performs on a trapeze attached to a balloon fell into the Lake of Zurich, a distance of 1,500 feet. He swam unhurt to the shore, just missing death by a few yards, for had he not sprung from his seat when within 50 feet of the lake he would have been dashed to pieces on the rocks.

Several instances of people falling from incredible heights and surviving to tell the tale can be quoted. At Brighton quite recently an actor known as Lieutenant Daring, who was playing the part of a naval officer who is attacked by brigands in a cinematograph play, and who was supposed to slip over the cliff—in reality, however, to stand on a plank which had been placed below the edge to make the illusion complete—missed his footing and fell 90 feet below into the sea, escaping with a sprained wrist.

An even more miraculous escape after a fall over a cliff was that of a seven-year-old child who had been gathering flowers on Culver cliff, near Sandown, Isle of Wight, who slipped and fell 200 feet. She was only slightly injured, a bottle which she carried being unbroken.

Glories of Ancient Buildings.

The famous Temple of Diana, at Ephesus, was 420 feet to the support of the roof; it was a hundred years in building. The largest of the Pyramids is 481 feet in height and 835 feet on the side. The base covered 11 acres. The stones are about 60 feet in length, and the layers are 208. It employed 350,000 men in building. The labyrinth of Egypt contains 330 chambers and 12 halls. Thebes, in Egypt, presents ruins 27 miles around, and contained 350,000 citizens and 400,000 slaves. The Temple of Delphos was so rich in donations that it was plundered of $50,000,000, and the Emperor Nero carried away from it 200 statues. The walls of ancient Rome were 13 miles around.

Dog Caused Boy's Death.

A boy was drowned by a dog he had on a leash jumping into the water and dragging him and his brother, walking with him, after it. The boys and a companion were walking along the towing path of the canal, at Rochdale, Lancashire, England, and had passed the lock, before the accident happened. An alarm was at once raised, and one of the brothers was speedily rescued by some boys who were playing near. An elder brother of the boys came on the scene and plunged into the canal. He succeeded in finding the other body, but artificial respiration proved unavailing.

Unearth Bones of Roman Soldiers.

The discovery has been announced from Rome, Italy, of a large ossuary, or place for the deposit of the bones of the dead, near the port of Telamon. The discovery is on the scene of the battle of Telamon, fought in the year 225 B. C., during the invasion of Italy by the Gauls, when the invading hordes were defeated by the Romans. The ruins of a Temple of Thanksgiving, erected by the Romans in memory of this victory, were unearthed in 1892. Further important discoveries are expected as a result of the present excavations.

"Let Jane Do It."

"Let Jane do it" is the new law in California since women got the vote. "Nowadays," says Miss Helen Todd of San Francisco, "when a man is approached by political slave drivers, who ask him to serve on all kinds of tiresome committees, he just says: 'Well, I'm too busy, boys; but ask my wife—she knows more about that than I do, anyway.'"—From "Down the Rio Grande."

EXCHANGE ECHOES

The parcel post department Looks, but it ought to be better. A town dealer paid three cents one day for sending a 50 cent book to a person ten miles away.—Georgetown Times.

This is a progressive age, but some people seem not to have gotten out of the habit of thinking that the postmaster is sometimes guilty of holding back mail that is due them.—Hartford Herald.

Misses Mary and Lorain Roberts and Carolyn Adams have leased the property formerly occupied by Dr. Nofsinger and have established a bachelor girls' home. They will be "At Home" after September 5.—Hazard Herald.

Last week a peculiar disease swooped down upon many flocks of chickens in town and vicinity and within 24 hours some had lost from a fourth to a half of their number. Big, little, young and old were equally attacked, the disease being fatal in every instance.—Mt. Olivet Tribune-Democrat.

Water has been selling at 25 cents per barrel in Flemingsburg, many springs and cisterns having gone dry. The deep well at the ice plant has held out and has never been dry. It furnishes water for the ice and light plant and for many persons who haul it away by the barrel.—Flemingsburg Gazette.

Col. Mel Tilford, of this city, accidentally gave his fine horse, valued at $200, Paris Green. Col. Tilford intended to give the horse a dose of cough medicine, but confused this medicine with Paris green. His mistake was not discovered until half an hour later, when it was too late to save the animal.—Leitchfield Gazette.

For the first time within the memory of the oldest inhabitant, Elk Fork creek has stopped running. There are two separate and distinct streams down at the East Main street bridge now. The little creek is gamely bearing up under the unprecedented drouth, however, and while naturally the quality now isn't the best there's plenty of water for stock and other purposes.—Todd Co. Times.

The people of Daviess can profit by the examples set in the Purchase. They can supplement the tax money in building rock roads by giving all the labor and hauling needed, thereby greatly increasing the permanent road mileage. They can help greatly in making a much better system of dirt roads if they would turn out and put in two days of real work on the roads.—Owensboro Inquirer.

Farmers living in the vicinity of Hamby Station and Isley report that hogs are dying with some disease. It is not known whether it is hog cholera or not. There seems to be a difference of opinion as to what the trouble really is. Some contend that it is cholera while others who have raised hogs for years say that it is not the old fashion cholera.—Dawson Tribune.

The peach crop in the city and vicinity seems to be unusually fine this year. Last week the Journal commented upon a specimen of the fruit that came from the orchard of W. J. Barnett and which weighed half a pound. D. C. Williams exhibited specimens of his crop Saturday that weighed over half a pound. They were of the Elberta variety, as were also Mr. Garnett's.—Pembroke Journal.

Mr. A. S. Lee, of the Knob Lick country, has one-eighth of an acre of tobacco that he has refused $50 for. He says is is on an old onion patch and has never been topped and is seven feet high. He says he has sixteen acres that will average a 100 per cent. crop. He calculates that the one-eighth of an acre will make 500 pounds of tobacco. He expects his sixty-acre corn crop to average six barrels to the acre.—Hart County News.

Powell county may have poor land, but the finest watermelons grown in Kentucky this year have been coming from near Clay City to Winchester for the past week. The meat is as fine and juicy as was ever tasted by those who enjoy this most appetizing of all melons. There has been but little rain in that section this season, yet a fine yield of the melon is reported and the size speaks for itself. It seems as if a big amount of money could be made by cultivating the Red River bottoms in melons, as there is always a good market for the crop no matter how large.—Winchester Democrat.

What co-operation will bring about in road building is shown in the results obtained "down in Panhandle" country, where the folks instead of setting on fence corners cussing the road law and county officials whose duty it becomes to enforce it went to work with a hearty good will to make the best of it, and after they "worked out their time" many of them kept right on and worked from one to seven days more than they were required by law. As a result they have a road that is a — [illegible] But still they are not satisfied. They seem to have caught the [illegible] Spirit of S[illegible] and [illegible] have become [illegible] too small [illegible]

CROP REPORT.

General Condition of Crops In the State Up to Sept. 1st.

The general condition of crops in Kentucky as of September 1st is anything but encouraging. On August 1st an estimate was made by the various crop reporters in the State with the hope that rain would fall. Scattered rains did fall during the latter part of August, but they were either not sufficient or not soon enough to make the first of September estimate of the crops even as high as the estimate of August 1st.

Corn has dropped to a condition of 58 4 per cent which means but little more than a half crop. Burley tobacco still remains at 65 per cent, but dark tobacco has dropped to a condition of 54 per cent. Alfalfa is 70 per cent cow peas 84 per cent and soy beans 72 per cent of an average crop. The spring sown clover shows an average condition of 63 per cent. The leguminous crops have held their own better than any other crop during this drouth. Bluegrass is given at 89 per cent, orchard grass at 82 per cent and pastures as a whole are very inferior.

Live stock has suffered very materially on account of short pastures and scarcity of water. The condition of horses is given at 90 per cent, cattle 83 per cent, hogs 85 per cent and sheep 92 per cent. The condition of poultry has likewise declined. Chickens are given as 92 per cent, turkeys 80 per cent and ducks 85 per cent.

All kinds of fruits have deteriorated. Apples are small, and many dropping from the trees, and their condition is shown as 67 per cent, peaches 74 per cent, plums, 58 per cent and pears 58 per cent. Garden conditions are deplorable, dropping to 44 per cent.

Abundant rain falls would not help anything as far as this year's crop is concerned. The corn crop would grow worse instead of better should abundant rains fall now; the same is true of tobacco. The danger in the curing period for corn and for tobacco is in having an excessive amount of moisture. Rains now would only have a tendency to spoil what is left of these two crops. Moisture is needed very badly for fall seeding, and would benefit next year's crop in this respect. Good rains would improve fall pastures. Water for stock is a serious problem in many localities and many fires are reported as a result of the dry weather. A match dropped in pastures in the condition in which they are at present is almost like dropping a spark in a powder magazine. The water supply in many towns in the State has given out, and fire losses as a result of the drouth are bound to be great.

One hundred and fifteen estimates of the cost of growing an acre of corn show an average estimate of $13.96. Last month's estimate of the cost of growing an acre of wheat was $10.16. It is interesting to note that the general opinion is that it costs $3.79 more to grow an acre of corn than an acre of wheat. Last years corn production in Kentucky was 30.4 bushels per acre. The present report would indicate a yield of about 18 bushels per acre for this year. Corn would have to bring about 77 cents per bushel on the average, based on this estimate of $13.95, to pay the actual cost of production.

LETTER FROM COLORADO

Denver Colo., Sept. 88th, 1913.

This is the third letter I have written the Recorder in six years, so I concluded my friends would like to hear from me again.

On the 25th of June I started from Chattanooga with two little girls, three and six years of age, came by Danville, Ky., and visited relatives of the children, who lived on some of the finest farms in Boyle and Lincoln counties. One farm contained 750 acres, the other 550, and on each, there are as many as five immense barns and all lighted with acetaline lights and have every convenience of the latest inventions. They would hold twenty acres of tobacco. They had the largest concrete silos I ever saw. They had their own blacksmith shops and farm scales. It would pay any farmer to visit these farms and see how prosperous they are and how everything is conducted.

We remained two weeks and had a pleasant visit. Then we came by the way of Louisville to St. Louis and from there out to Columbia, Mo., where the Agricultural State College is located. We were surprised to see the number of buildings in this campus. I visited one of the retired professors and his family, so while out driving he explained what each building was for, making it very interesting. I also learned that it was the home of the finest cow in the United States, the celebrated Josephine, owned by the State of Missouri.

We remained there five days and started on our way and landed in Denver, Colorado, on the 16th of July. The mother of these little girls had been here for a year for her health and was advised by physicans to remain here. The father came on a head to secure a suitable home by the time we arrived. The two brothers of the little girls, one 14 and the other 17, came through in the auto and traveled nearly 2,500 miles, but landed safely.

I have been here two months and shall remain here this winter. We have a beautiful home five miles out on Mountview Boule vard, running into the city park which is a beautiful place containing 800 acres with beautiful lakes, a museum, a zoo with all kinds of animals and a half mile race track and grandstand, and the best of it everything is free. They have races every Saturday afternoon. They give premiums but no money, and I have seen some pretty good trotting.

Denver and the surrounding country is beautiful. You can look over the prairie and see for miles and turn and face the mountains and see snow on them most any time of the year. The scenery is beautiful.

Twenty years ago they passed an ordinance here that no building should be erected but of brick or concrete so they have some beautiful residences. The business houses cannot exceed in height eight stories.

I believe Denver ranks third in education. They have very fine public schools and furnish books, which is quite an advantage over other places.

The population of Denver I understand is 213,000 and they say 55 per cent of them came here for their health or for the benefit of some one else.

It is always very pleasant here. While the thermometer was registering 105 in Cincinnati it was 54 here at nights.

I took an auto ride yesterday afternoon about ten miles and was surprised to see them cutting hay and wheat and it was fine. Rye was hardly ripe enough and here it is September. Cows are selling for $100 or more. We went to town to market one morning and got there by six o'clock and it was a sight to me.

DORA BANNISTER.

Hubert Gaines' horse got loose at the Harvest Home last Saturday and it remained on the grounds where he found it Sunday morning, the harness all in good shape except one fine which the animal had broken.

The New Orleans Picayune asks why some women begin a letter on the first page, then skip to the third, then return to the second, then on to the fourth. Perhaps because it takes longer to read it that way.

ANNOUNCEMENT!

We take plensure in announcing to our many friends that we are grinding home grown wheat, and our flour is of such fine quality and will give perfect satisfaction. Local couditions during harvest last year affected the quality of the wheat, but this season the wheat is again ideal and it is producing, when milled under our modern system of milling, a flour that cannot be equaled for snowy bread and delicious pastry. Kentucky and Indiana wheat produces the flour that makes the best flavored bread possible to be made. The choicest of this wheat is used in the milling of Everything is rather quiet about Burlington this week.

Some think they saw a light frost last Saturday morning.

The weather at present indicates that frost may come at any time now.

J. F. Blyth killed two wild ducks on a pond near town last Monday morning.

The showers the past week will make the ground to be ready for wheat plow much better.

Thurston Hocnes left Sunday for McVille, were called by the office last Friday afternoon.

The rain last week came too late to benefit the crops much but it revived the spirits of the people.

No preaching at the Huntington Baptist church last Sunday owing to the illness of the pastor, Rev. Campbell.

Winter clothing has been quite comfortable the past week, following a fall of fifty degrees in the temperature.

George Baker, the Limaburg disciple of Vulcan, was transacting business in Burlington last Monday morning.

B. B. Hume attended the Falmouth fair last Friday, where he found a good exhibition and a very large crowd.

Dr. E. L. Glauken was soliciting money for the Harvest Home with which to provide premiums for the corn show this fall.

A couple of communications reached this office at noon last Wednesday, making it entirely too late for them to be handled.

Some of the tobacco buyers in the State claim that what this year's crop will lack in quantity will be made up for in quality.

It is considered a very quiet night in Walton when the homes of less that half a dozen of the citizens are entered by burglars.

An Oklahoma newspaper advertises as follows: "Full-blooded cow for sale, giving milk, three tons of hay, a lot of chickens and several stoves.

If the party who took the premium on watermelon at the Harvest Home will furnish the Association his name he will be forwarded his dollar.

If a motorist can figure one chance in two of getting across in front of a fast train he should take the risk, or the record for the run will be spoiled.

About every man you meet has a plan for obtaining good roads in this county, and they all agree that like the proverbial mule, it takes money to make them go.

County Road Engineer Charles Goodridge, is attending the Road Convention in session in Louisville. He probably will give the State Fair some attention as a sideline.

Harry Roberts, who has resided in Cincinnati for several months has ordered his Recorder changed to Erlanger where he will reside in the future but continue business in the city.

W. C. Goodridge was in town last Thursday, the first time since he was thrown out of his buggy at the creamery and injured. He has not recovered entirely from his injuries.

Erastus Rice, of Rising Sun, has 100 hogsheads of old tobacco on hand, for which he expects to get fifteen cents a pound, which, in the aggregate, will make quite a handsome amount of money.

J. F. Blyth spent the greater part of last Friday on Gunpowder creek, equipped with several kinds of bait, both natural and artificial, but none of it tempted the bass.

The cool weather caused some of the growers to get a little nervous for fear that frost would catch some of their tobacco. A killing frost in September is a very uncommon occurrence in this part of the country.

The following Burlington people are at Louisville attending the State Fair: J. C. Devill, Sherman Gaines, C. L. Gaines, [illegible] P. Riddell and wife, Mrs. [illegible] L. Riddell and Miss Carrie Rouse, Hume, A. B. Kreuzer, all of Gaines.

Baptist Association.

The North Bend Association of Baptists, held with the church at Burlington, on Wednesday and Thureday of last week, was attended by a large crowd each day, and the weather during the session was all that could be desired.

The session was called to order Wednesday morning by the Moderator, Rev. Wm. McMillan, pastor of Big Bone church, and devotional exercises followed.

The introductory sermon was preached by Rev. McDaniel, pastor of the First Baptist church, Covington. It was a very able discourse and was heard by an attentive congregation.

All the churches in the Association except two were represented.

Rev. McMillan was reelected Moderator, and Harry Adams, of Latonia, was elected clerk.

The statistical reports handed in by the several churches show the association in a thrifty condition and that a great deal of work had been accomplished during the past year. The ministers present were comparatively young and an earnest set of men, all being fluent talkers, hence the several sessions were enlivened by animated discussion of the important topics under consideration.

The next session of the association will be held with Gunpowder church.

CROP REPORT.

General Condition of Crops In the State Up to Sept. 1st.

The general condition of crops in Kentucky as of September 1st is anything but encouraging. On August 1st an estimate was made by the various crop reporters in the State with the hope that rain would fall. Scattered rains did fall during the latter part of August, but they were either not sufficient or not soon enough to make the first of September estimate of the crops even as high as the estimate of August 1st.

Corn has dropped to a condition of 58 4 per cent which means but little more than a half crop. Burley tobacco still remains at 65 per cent, but dark tobacco has dropped to a condition of 54 per cent. Alfalfa is 70 per cent cow peas 84 per cent and soy beans 72 per cent of an average crop. The spring sown clover shows an average condition of 63 per cent. The leguminous crops have held their own better than any other crop during this drouth. Bluegrass is given at 89 per cent, orchard grass at 62 per cent and pastures as a whole are very inferior.

Live stock has suffered very materially on account of short pastures and scarcity of water. The condition of horses is given at 90 per cent, cattle 83 per cent, hogs 85 per cent and sheep 92 per cent. The condition of poultry has likewise declined. Chickens are given as 92 per cent, turkeys 80 per cent and ducks 85 per cent.

All kinds of fruits have deteriorated. Apples are small, and many dropping from the trees, and their condition is shown as 67 per cent, peaches 74 per cent, plums, 58 per cent and pears 58 per cent. Garden conditions are deplorable, dropping to 44 per cent.

Abundant rain falls would not help anything as far as this year's crop is concerned. The corn crop would grow worse instead of better should abundant rains fall now; the same is true of tobacco. The danger in the curing period for corn and for tobacco is in having an excessive amount of moisture. Rains now would only have a tendency to spoil what is left of these two crops. Moisture is needed very badly for fall seeding, and would benefit next year's crop in this respect. Good rains would improve fall pastures. Water for stock is a serious problem in many localities and many fires are reported as a result of the dry weather. A match dropped to pastures in the condition in which they are at present is almost like dropping a spark in a powder magazine. The water supply in many towns in the State has given out, and fire losses as a result of the drouth are bound to be great.

One hundred and fifteen estimates of the cost of growing an acre of corn show an average estimate of $13.95. Last month's estimate of the cost of growing an acre of wheat was $10.16. It is interesting to note that the general opinion is that it costs $3.79 more to grow an acre of corn than an acre of wheat. Last year's corn production in Kentucky was 30.4 bushels per acre. The present report would indicate a yield of about 18 buehels per acre for this year. Corn would have to bring about 77 cents per bushel on the average, based on this estimate of $13.95, to pay the actual cost of production.

Commissioner of Agriculture.

A four horse wagon loaded with watermelons bound for Richwood passed through Burlington, last Tuesday.

Robertson, one of the smallest counties in the state, has the highest school per capita of any in the state—$4.44. This is made so by the dog tax, the residue after paying for the sheep that are killed by dogs going to the school fund. The per capita allowed by the State is $4.00.

ANNOUNCEMENT!

We take plensure in announcing to our many friends that we are grinding home grown wheat, and the flour is of fine quality and will give perfect satisfaction. Local couditions during harvest last year affected the quality of the wheat, but this season the wheat is again ideal and it is producing, when milled under our modern system of milling, a flour that cannot be equaled for snowy bread and delicious pastry. Kentucky and Indiana wheat produces the flour that makes the best flavored bread possible to be made. The choicest of this wheat is used in the milling of

Rising Sun Flour

And remember this---RISING SUN FLOUR is absolutely and positively guaranteed to be unbleached. We never did and never will bleach our flour. Quality and purity have always been our watch-word and years of success have been our reward. We ask you to use RISING SUN FLOUR and in so doing you have the satisfaction of knowing that you have the best, purest and cleanest flour that it is possible for any mill to make. Ask for RISING SUN FLOUR and insist on getting what you ask for. TRY A SACK TODAY.

LETTER FROM COLORADO

Denver Colo., Sept. 8th, 1913.

This is the third letter I have written the Recorder in six years, so I concluded my friends would like to hear from me again.

On the 25th of June I started from Chattanooga with two little girls, three and six years of age, came by Danville, Ky., and visited relatives of the children, who lived on some of the finest farms in Boyle and Lincoln counties. One farm contained 750 acres, the other 550, and on each, there are as many as five immense barns and all lighted with acetaline lights and have every convenience of the latest inventions. They would hold twenty acres of tobacco. They had the largest concrete silos I ever saw. They had their own blacksmith shops and farm scales. It would pay any farmer to visit these farms and see how prosperous they are and how everything is conducted.

We remained two weeks and had a pleasant visit. Then we came by the way of Louisville to St. Louis and from there out to Columbia, Mo., where the Agricultural State College is located. We were surprised to see the number of buildings in this campus. I visited one of the retired professors and his family, so while out driving he explained what each building was for, making it very interesting. I also learned that it was the home of the finest cow in the United States, the celebrated Josephine, owned by the State of Missouri.

We remained there five days and started on our way and landed in Denver, Colorado, on the 16th of July. The mother of these little girls had been here for a year for her health and was advised by physicans to remain here. The father came on a head to secure a suitable home by the time we arrived. The two brothers of the little girls, one 14 and the other 17, came through in the auto and traveled nearly 2,500 miles, but landed safely.

I have been here two months and shall remain here this winter. We have a beautiful home five miles out on Mountview Boulevard, running into the city park which is a beautiful place containing 800 acres with beautiful lakes, a museum, a zoo with all kinds of animals and a half mile race track and grandstand, and the best of it everything is free. They have races every Saturday afternoon. They give premiums but no money, and I have seen some pretty good trotting.

Denver and the surrounding country is beautiful. You can look over the prairie and see for miles and turn and face the mountains and see snow on them most any time of the year. The scenery is beautiful.

Twenty years ago they passed an ordinance here that no building should be erected but of brick or concrete so they have some beautiful residences. The business houses cannot exceed in height eight stories.

I believe Denver ranks third in education. They have very fine public schools and furnish books, which is quite an advantage over other places.

The population of Denver I understand is 213,000 and they say 55 per cent of them came here for their health or for the benefit of some one else.

It is always very pleasant here. While the thermometer was registering 105 in Cincinnati it was 54 here at nights.

I took an auto ride yesterday afternoon about ten miles and was surprised to see them cutting hay and wheat and it was fine. Rye was hardly ripe enough and here it is September. Cows are selling for $100 or more. We went to town to market one morning and got there by six o'clock and it was a sight to me.

DORA BANNISTER.

Hubert Gaines' horse got loose at the Harvest Home last Saturday and it remained on the grounds where he found it Sunday morning, the harness all in good shape except one line which the animal had broken.

The New Orleans Picayune asks why some women begin a letter on the first page, then skip to the third, then return to the second, then on to the fourth. Perhaps because it takes longer to read it that way.

Crime Against Kentucky Soils To Leave Them Exposed—Rye Much in Favor—Soil Has Hard Struggle To Produce Even Reasonably Good Crops

Young Growing Swine on Rye Pasture in Winter.

(T. R. Bryant, Superintendent Extension Division, Kentucky Experiment Station.)

Even the most casual observer who has any regard for the agricultural welfare of Kentucky, has noticed the crime against Kentucky soils, of leaving them exposed through the winter months. The majority of the land in this state is of a rolling, hilly or even mountainous topography, the soil in the majority of cases being clay loam, which conditions conspire to make the soils wash readily. The cropping systems used by our farmers are none too good, in fact in many cases are very bad, and the soil has a hard struggle to produce reasonably good crops even if properly cared for during the winter.

Corn occupies a greater acreage in Kentucky than any other crop and since many other crops are also cultivated, the loosened soil is left in the best possible condition for gullying. This method of cultivation having been kept up year after year has left its marks which may be seen in the majority of the counties of the state in the form of deep gullies or barren parched hillsides, reducing the productiveness of the soils to such an extent as to make its tillage impracticable.

The most effective way of preventing this great damage is by never leaving our land without a cover crop during the winter months.

It is a well known fact that in the late summer and early fall, under reasonably seasonable conditions, the bacterial life in the warm soil is as active as at any other time during the year. Under the action of these micro-organisms in the soil a large amount of plant food is converted from insoluble into readily soluble forms, in which condition it awaits only a rain, to be leached out and carried away. The rational thing for us to do under these circumstances is to have something growing which will utilize this readily available plant food incorporate it within its growing body and thus hold it to be used for next year's crop. Such a crop as rye, sown from the first of September to the middle of October, feeds greedily upon this plant food as it is made available, gets a good growth under reasonable conditions and is ready for its manifold duties through the winter.

Rye is much in favor as a cover crop because of the relative cheapness of seed, the lateness at which rye can be sown, the comparative certainty of getting a stand, its degree of immunity to winter freezing, and the amount and quality of the pasture furnished in the fall, winter and early spring.

It has been found at the Kentucky Experiment Station that young rye up to six inches in height contains 5.75 per cent of protein, and being so rich in protein it is a most excellent feed for young animals. Young pigs thrive on rye pasture and even in the winter can be seen rooting through the snow in order to bite off the tender blades. In case rye is sown especially for the use of swine in the winter it would be well to sow three or four bushes to the acre, one-half this quantity being drilled east and west and the other half north and south, which method secures almost a sod which is not easily broken through in wet weather. It is also a good idea to sow rye broadcast in the corn field from the first of September to the middle of October, to serve as a cover crop or pasture or both.

While rye serves a valuable purpose in utilizing and thus conserving available plant food through the autumn and winter months, it is not a legume and consequently fixes no atmospheric nitrogen. This shortcoming can be largely overcome by supplementing the rye crop with hairy or winter vetch. In using rye and vetch together it is a good idea to sow early in September, using three pecks of rye and twenty pounds of vetch seed, mixed. The feeding value of vetch is excellent and it deserves a prominent place in our system of farming.

Such a cover crop as mixed rye and vetch or rye alone is very valuable as a green soiling crop to be turned under in the spring. The turning under should not be postponed too long, in fact it should be done before the rye joints. If postponed until after this time the probability is that the soil will be drying out considerably and the enormous quantity of vegetable matter composed largely of straw, if the rye is allowed to head out, will not decompose readily and will serve as a barrier to the capillary rise of moisture from the subsoil, and the result will be that whatever crop is being grown will suffer unless it has a very damp season.

HOG RAISING PROFITABLE TO FARMERS

(T. R. Bryant, Superintendent Extension Division, Kentucky Experiment Station.)

Suggestions on Swine Raising.

Perhaps the two most noticeable wants of Kentucky agriculture, is the lack of sufficient live stock on the average farm and the exposure of naked land to winter rains. As regards the live stock situation perhaps no phase of it offers greater opportunities to the average farmer than hog raising. A few suggestions on this subject might not be amiss here. With the exception of milking dairy cows, hardly any investment of money in feed for live stock is more promptly returned than that invested in hog raising. Many other arguments in favor of an increase in the swine industry might be easily cited. However, in raising swine as is the case with all other stock we can afford to raise none but the best. By this is not meant any particular breed but that the animals should be of some pure breed. Kentucky farmers are noticeably contented with things other than the best, which condition should not prevail. A good grade is better than a poor animal of pure breeding, but generally speaking the pure bred animal excels the scrub or cross, and again it is a well recognized fact that the second cross is of little value and the herd of the pure breeder must then be sought and his own price paid for a fresh start.

Those of us who have had any experience on the markets know what it means to get the top price or on the other hand to have to take fifty cents on one dollar below the top price, because our hogs do not top the market. This discrepancy must be deducted from the net profits, which are none too large at best. Inheritance largely fixes the possibility of an animal, furnishes the detailed plans and specifications beforehand, while the feeding later builds the structure and maintains it. It costs no more, if as much, to put a pound of flesh on a pure bred hog as it does on a cross bred or scrub animal, and the difference in the selling price warrants an absolute changing from non-descript to pure bred animals.

Intelligent feeding of swine can be made to accomplish surprising gains. Farmers generally agree that it is very difficult to make satisfactory gains in young swine during the winter, but in suggesting along this line, a word of commendation should be given to rye pasture for the late fall, during open winter weather, and in the early spring. Young rye is rich in protein which is so essential to growing the body of a young animal and without an adequate supply of which he soon assumes a starved appearance. Young rye is as good as clover for this purpose.

It is a well known fact that an animal well fed while young is a more satisfactory feeder later on, and that an animal starved while young can seldom if ever be made to put on the best gains afterwards.

Skimmed milk is one of the best known supplements for corn in feeding young swine and we will do ourselves no harm by making an effort to produce more milk for the dairy industry even on a very moderate scale is highly profitable.

Soy beans and corn is the proportion of one to six make an excellent ration for young pigs and the soy beans should by all means be grown on the home farm for we thereby serve the double purpose of improving the soil by growing the beans and we provide one of the best possible pig feeds. High grade digester tankage, one part, and corn nine parts, is a good ration for young stock. For finishing the mature hog probably corn alone is best for all practical purposes. By proper breeding and feeding we can obtain surprisingly rapid gains and early maturity, thereby lessening the cost of gains.

NOTICE OF SPECIAL MEETING.

Notice is hereby given that a special meeting of the stockholders of the Burley Tobacco Company of Lexington, Kentucky, are hereby notified that by order of the Kenton Circuit Court, Judge F. M. Tracy, presiding, entered on Thursday, September 11, 1913, in the case of E. B. Stansifer, et al vs Clarence Lebus, et al., the meeting of the stockholders, heretofore ordered to be held on the seventh day of October, 1913, for the purpose of electing a Board of Directors for said Company, has been postponed and will be held at Lexington, Kentucky, on Thursday, November 6, 1913, at 1 o'clock p. m., at the Company's Warehouse on South Broadway. Said meeting will be presided over and said election conducted by J. M. Rankin and Walter T. Loomis, Commissioners appointed by the Court for said purpose. At said meeting the stockholders may consider and act upon any question which they could consider and act upon at any regular annual meeting of the stockholders.

The stockholders are also notified that the above named Commissioners are now engaged in preparing a Stock Ledger for the purpose of determining the persons who will be entitled to vote at said stockholders' meeting, and upon what stock should be issued. Said Stock Ledger will be closed finally on the seventh day of October, 1913, and the holders of warehouse receipts, upon which stock certificates have not already been issued, are required to report to the Commissioners on or before the seventh day of October, 1913, any transfer or sale of such warehouse receipts. In order to facilitate the work of the commissioners, all warehouse receipts which have been sold or transferred should be sent in at once, including any other document evidencing such sale or transfer. Transfers of warehouse receipts made or reported after the above date will not be considered, but the right to vote the stock represented by such warehouse receipts will stand in the name of the person or persons owning said warehouse receipts as shown by the records of the Commissioners on said date unless by consent of the Commissioners, or by order of the Court. Stock may be voted in person or by proxy.

All communications should be addressed to the undersigned at Lexington, Ky., in care of the Burley Tobacco Company.

NOVEMBER SIXTH

The Day Set For the Election of Officers of The Burley Tobacco Co.

Attorneys representing the parties in the suit of Elmer Stansifer and others against Clarence LeBus and the Burley Tobacco Co. Thursday afternoon conferred with Kenton Circuit Judge Tracy in reference to the coming erection of officers of the company. An agreement was reached by the Court and attorneys for both sides that the day of election, which originally was set for Oct. 7th, be postponed until Nov. 6.

The suit of Stansifer and others against the company is of great interest to more than 40,000 stockholders and many tobacco raisers. It is estimated that the amount involved reaches $1,000,000. The election campaign is warming up and interest centers about LeBus, who is seeking the Presidency and is opposed by former Congressman J. N. Kehoe. The latter has the backing of the plaintiffs in the suit, while LeBus is supported by the present officers of the company. A supersedeas order, previously granted, was ordered set aside by Judge Tracy yesterday, who also ordered that all transfers of warehouse receipts, to which no reservation of stock is made, be treated and considered by the recent Board of Commissioners named to handle the books of the company and that they be entered upon the books.

The Independent's forecast of Gallatin's tobacco crop last week brought forth the usual crop of pessimists who softly intimated that the editor was lacking in certain definite and prescribed knowledge of facts essential to the making of a correct forecast, and really did not know what he was talking about. The harvesting of the crop will establish the accuracy of the forecast, all right and also witness a marked increase in the price of the weed, as these gentlemen who now state that their crop is grossly inferior to any they have had before, will discover, after curing, that it is worth 25 cents a pound.—Warsaw Independent.

The Idle Rich.

This country is getting burdened with the idle rich and those who think they are rich enough to loaf on the seashore at some pleasure resort instead of working. The fact is that the high cost of living would receive a serious set back if all these would go to work and especially if the idle rich would embark in a business that would occupy the time of themselves and their retinue profitably and furnish an investment for their capital. There are thousands of acres of land in the middle and southern states thrown out which could be bought up and reclaimed and this would furnish an occupation for the idle rich and their money which would be laudable, profitable and pleasant and at the same time many in the down and out class could be furnished an opportunity to come to the farm and be a source of pleasure to his family as well a helpful provider. American health resorts baited with rich old maids and widows today only furnishes a stamping ground for Dukes, Counts, Earls, from across the waters. America would be much better off and these female Americans would be better off and happier if they would get struck on a cow boy or a Western farmer instead of wasting their sweetness on the dudes and counts of the old country.

There is room in the United States to provide space for the active use of all the idle muscle, brain and brawn.—Ex.

Clean men in politics have not been able to make clean elections. On the contrary it has soiled the hands and destroyed the reputation of many men who were types of moral rectitude before they entered into the dirty game of politics. It is no wonder in the face of this well known fact, that Senator Tillman said "politics would destroy woman as we know her and love her." We might as well expect women to bring about temperance reform by becoming saloon keepers as to reform politics by mingling their skirts into its filth and slime.—Elizabethtown News.

...ed by a battery with machinery under...ing Taboga or Otoque, making that place unknown to the enemy. And while there is nothing on the island that could not be replaced in a few days, it would be a hard thing to do, and the loss of time would be considerable. Then, too, the Panama railroad has been strengthened to such an extent that it could handle all the troops and supplies necessary to be landed by the United States in a few days. It has been determined that the garrison shall be sufficient to protect the railroad from attack by forces that might have succeeded in landing on the isthmus. As a defense against this it may be that a small army must be maintained in the zone, and it has been suggested that the towns of Empire and Culebra, instead of being destroyed because they are on the "wrong side" of the canal, be utilized as quarters for the soldiers. This would necessitate connecting them with the other side of the canal, where the Panama railroad has been re-located, by ferry, bridge or tunnel. No decision on this matter has been reached yet by the authorities.

Meanwhile the army has not been neglecting its part of the defensive work. For some time the Tenth infantry has been encamped in the zone and its men, in small detachments, have been "hiking" all over that part of the isthmus. The possibilities of landing a hostile force on the shores of both the Atlantic and the Pacific have been investigated, and also the chances that such a force would have of finding sustenance. Then little groups of soldiers have been started from various possible landing places with instructions to make their way as swiftly as possible to given points along the canal, mapping the country they traverse, in order to determine what an enemy could do.

The result of this work of investigation so far, briefly and wholly unofficially stated, is that the shores of the Atlantic ocean, within a good many miles of the zone, are impracticable for a landing force because of the nature of the country; that a landing could be made easily on the Pacific side some distance west of the zone, but between there and the canal the jungle is so dense as to be virtually impassable; that the dangerous district is that lying immediately east of the zone on the Pacific side. On the last mentioned shores an enemy could well land an army, and the semi-open, rolling savannas between there and the canal would give easy access to the zone.

The army officers on the isthmus make no secret of the fact that their investigations are being carried on mainly with the Japanese in mind. How those islanders could land there and what they could do if they did land are the problems engaging the attention of Colonel Greene and his men of the Tenth.

One defensive measure that has been adopted is the clearing out of practically all inhabitants from the zone, except at the ends of the canal and in several of the larger towns, which, as I have said, may be kept as quarters for the soldiers. All holdings of land are being valued by a mixed commission and the residents moved away. When the canal is completed the jungle, much of which has been cleared out, will be allowed to grow up again, for the experience of centuries has shown that that jungle itself is a powerful defense against an invading army. The practicable roads through it are few and far between, the rivers not navigable, and the growth of trees, brush and great vines so dense that it is virtually impassable for a body of men, to say nothing of cannon and supply wagons. A rapid march through the jungle would be entirely out of the question, and when the zone is deserted all food supplies will have disappeared.

Some fear has been expressed that a few men could land, make their way quickly to the canal and blow it up. But it seems unlikely that they could get where they wanted to in the short time required, except by accident, and the chances of accident are small.

On the whole, the canal will be quite adequately protected against anything we are likely to encounter.

Quarantine Station on Culebra Island.

trance of the canal. One is on Toro Point, at the land end of the long breakwater that shields Colon harbor, and is on a considerable elevation. The other is on Margarita island, a low-lying islet close to the shore about a mile northeast of Colon. Both these fortifications are shielded from observation by the palms and other tropic vegetation.

At the Pacific end of the canal, a little more than three miles out in the ocean and close to the eastern side of the deep water channel, lie the four little islands of Naos, Perico, Culebra and Flamenco. These the United States acquired with the Canal Zone. On Culebra is the quarantine station for that end of the canal. On the others are being built strong fortifications.

tions. The rounded tops of the rocky islets have been cut off and a little army of men is busy blasting and excavating and preparing the bulwarks behind which will be mounted long range cannon and immense mortars. The four islands are all being connected with each other and Naos, the nearest, is joined to the mainland at Balboa, as a breakwater about 17,000 feet long, on which has been constructed a railway line.

Some eight miles away, nearly due south, lies the larger island of Taboga, and timid souls have suggested that it would form a safer quarter and recruiting point for a landing force, for its hills rise to a considerable elevation and on its crest is also a colony of lepers. But if General Greene's opinion is to be accepted as final, it should be—[illegible] United States [illegible]

NOT MEANT TO BE SERIOUS

Comparative Harmlessness of French Duels Is Largely a Matter of Arrangement.

A large proportion of the duels in France end without bloodshed. When the offense is not very serious it is agreed beforehand that the words of command shall be given so rapidly that the duelists will not have time to take good aim. Sometimes three shots are exchanged without a hit, and then the seconds step in and—"honor is satisfied." At the word "Fire!" the pistol is raised instantly, and it must be discharged not later than the word "three," so the speed with which these words are given regulates the time in which it is possible to take aim. Therefore the speed with which they are spoken is agreed upon beforehand, this depending upon the seriousness of the duel. The words are timed with a metronome. If the encounter be very serious this is set at the slowest speed, 80 beats a minute, which gives time for taking accurate aim. A speed of 140 beats a minute allows no time for aiming, and, therefore, is used when the seconds consider the duel should be made as little dangerous as possible.

Rural Life, the Nation's Hope.

I warn my countrymen that the great recent progress made in city life is not a full measure of our civilization, for our civilization rests at bottom on the wholesomeness, the attractiveness and the completeness, as well as the prosperity of life in the country. The men and women on the farms stand for what is fundamentally best and most needed in our American life. Upon the development of country life rests ultimately our ability, by methods requiring the highest intelligence, to continue to feed and clothe the hungry nation; to supply the city with fresh blood, clean bodies and clear brains that can endure the terrific strain of modern life; we need the development of men in the open country who will be in the future as in the past the stay and strength of the nation.—Theodore Roosevelt.

Pebble Industry in Normandy.

The pebble industry is becoming quite important in upper Normandy, France. The cliffs of the Caux region, undermined by subterranean springs and by the waves of the English channel, slip, fall and break. They are formed of a calcareous mass containing flints. These flints fall to the bottom of the sea, where they become flat and take an ovoid shape.

Their color is blue, spotted with brown, yellow or red stripes. They are used to manufacture concrete stone and earthenware, and their dust is even employed to make paint and rice powder imitation.

Over 120,000 tons of pebbles are annually picked up on the Normandy beaches. Most of it is sent abroad.

Queer Translations.

When the Bible was translated into Japanese, an equivalent to the word "baptize" could not be found, and the word "soak" had to be used instead, so that the Japanese Biblical students are acquainted with a person named "John the Soaker," and with a doctrine of "soaking for remission of sins." In that case the ministration is due to inadequacy of language. A school boy once rendered "Miserere, Domine" into "Oh, heart-broken schoolmaster!" And another recovered from German the text "The spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak" in the form, "The ghost of course is ready, but the flesh is weak."

A treat for our readers that we have arranged for is a series of twelve illustrated articles on

The Panama Canal and the Isthmus in History and Romance

By Edward W. Pickard

Mr. Pickard is that type of globe-trotting author who seeks the quaint and curious places and people as subjects for his clever descriptive articles. In his present series of twelve articles which we have arranged to print, he has touched not only the actual work of building the canal, and the people who have accomplished it, but has gone into what the newspaper worker knows as the side lines, and which as a rule are of as much interest as the main story. This is particularly true in this case. After our readers have completed the last of Mr. Pickard's articles they will have a better understanding of the Panama Canal, and conditions within and surrounding the canal zone.

Scott county pulled off another local option election last week. Scott county holds two or three elections every years. It seems that the drys cannot get an election to stick.

The thief or thieves who have had Walton citizens terrorized by his or their midnight visits to numerous residences within the past three weeks again made their appearance last Thursday night when they visited the residences of Dr. B. K. Menefee, J. E. Bristow, J. D. Doubman and several other residences in the southern part of town. The residence of Mr. Bristow was entered but nothing was taken. The residence of Dr. B. K. Menefee was next visited with like result. The home of Mr. Doubman next received attention. Mrs. Doubman discovered the intruder on the window sill and securing a revolver took a shot at the intruder who dropped out of the window and fled. Whether before or after the thief had entered the home of R. F. DeMoisey in the northern part of the town thru a window and stole $10 in a pocketbook from the pants pocket of Mr. DeMoisey. Some of our citizens telegraphed to Lexington, Ky., for Mr. Mulligan to bring his bloodhounds here on the first train to try and track the guilty parties, but when the hounds and owner arrived the ground around the premises had been tramped over to such an extent that it was impossible for the hounds to take up the trail and Mr. Mulligan returned with his dogs to his home at Lexington. While there is rumors as to who the thief is, there is no evidence as yet to convict anyone. In the opinion of many it is only a question of a short time when the culprit will be caught or killed in one of his midnight excursions.

Hale and Hearty at 128.

Sam McKoy, of North Carolina, claims to be 129 years old. He is hale and hearty, has splendid eyesight, never having worn glasses and looks as if he was good for at least 25 more years of contented life. Sam is a native of St. Pauls, N. C., where he came into this world on June 28, 1786. He has a wonderful memory, for he remembers distinctly when the first boat came up the Cape Fear river in 1799, but until a few years ago he had never seen a railroad locomotive. Sam is the father of 18 children, and his youngest child is now 60 years old. His grandchildren, greatgrandchildren and great-great-grandchildren are scattered over the country from New York to Florida.

When a child Sam helped the first settlers clear the land in North Carolina. He has always been a user of tobacco and attributes his long life to the fact that he never worried about anything.

Importance of Good Seed Bed for Wheat.

The way you prepare your seed bed has very much to do with the yield next summer. It is with wheat as with all other main crops, the seed bed must be properly prepared and good seed sown to reap a good harvest.

All plowing should be already completed. Early plowing allows the seed bed to compact and allows re-establishment of the capillary connection. Before plowing it is better to disk the ground. This gets rid of all air spaces. After plowing use disk, roller and harrow until the soil is well pulverized. Wheat must have a fine seed bed. The roots are delicate and must come in close contact with the soil.

If you are going to sow in the corn field, disk it well. Use a stalk cutter and cut down all of them. Sometimes I have seen a railroad rail used on a cold morning to a good advantage. This was, of course, in the winter long after the wheat was up.

One must fertilize well. The wheat plant is a weak feeder and only the most highly soluble fertilizers should be used. Give preference to goods containing a high percentage of available phosphoric acid and not less than one to three of potash, which will insure a better growth of grass and clover. Drill in not less than 250 pounds to an acre. —Mrs. R. R. in Indiana Farmer.

Tobacco cutting has been in progress in Madison county during the past week, but the dry condition is causing a great handicap to the growers. They are in many cases having to house as fast as it is cut in order to save it from drying up.

On an inside page will be found agricultural matter prepared especially for Kentucky farmers. The Recorder believes that its readers will appreciate this feature which will appear from week to week.

LETTER FROM MISSISSIPPI.

Jackson, Miss., Sept. 20, 1913.
Boone County Recorder:—

Received your statement a few days ago, and beg to hand you herewith check covering the arrears on my subscription. I certainly enjoy the paper every week and look for it as I do a letter from home. While we have been away from Kentucky now three years until I state lost none of the interest for the dear old State. And the familiar names I find in the columns of your paper each week, serves as a visit back among the old Boone lar scenes as it were.

A word about our business here. Our Company with its ramifications with it, was to branch out in line. Our first step was to Birmingham, where I went and opened up the business and remained two years until I had it well established and running order. During this time just a year ago, we built a large plant here which has been in operation one season and unable to get a suitable yard to handle it satisfactorily, so developed in the early season the one of us would have to transfer to take charge while the crop season. The lot I desired came to me, which was quite a compliment, my being one of the youngest in the business. We have here the best, as well as the largest plant we have. Are situated right in the heart of a good Cane territory, and is confined to be the biggest crop we have in course of another year or two. I felt very much complimented over the promotion, and feel that I shall be able to realize the best results possible for our business.

Jackson, while not the metropolis that Birmingham is, will being the state Capital, has all the state institutions located here, and as it is a city of nine Southern people have been my associates to [illegible] with. [illegible] station, [illegible] section, and to [illegible] about three weeks after Xmas more prevalable to [illegible] live than Birmingham.

They are just awakening here. Eastern capital is coming in and this will be a great little city some day. They are progressive, anxiously seeking new industries and awake to the trend of the times. They very generously gave me a $1,000 lot as an inducement when we located our plant here, besides exempting us from taxation for a term of years.

We are still on the line of the Q. & C. yet about 150 miles farther away than since we left the good old state. Have quite a number of nice industries, a great railroad center, the I. C. having a double track from here to New Orleans, just 180 miles.

If any of you good people ever chance to come this way, we certainly will appreciate your stopping off in Jackson to see us. Asking to be remembered to all of the Boone county folks, and with kind personal regards, I beg to remain. Very Truly,

S. L. WEBB.

Hard Winter Prophesied.

New York, Sept. 15.—A report to be a hard winter. The cold of the last few mornings is only a prelude to what we are going to get soon. This is no idle talk of the weather bureau or perrailage of the almanac. It is hard cold facts. Bill Snyder head keeper of the menagerie in Central park is authority. He looks to the gray squirrels for his forecast and says they have begun to build their neats and this means the near approach of cold weather. The grays began their nest building four weeks ahead of schecule time, comparing with last year.

Estimates on Burley Crop.

Carlisle.—Estimates on the burley crop yield are reported from 55 to 65 per cent. Predictions of high prices are already being realized offers of $23 per hundred being reported in Nicholas and adjoining counties for fancy crops. Buyers in the field are making offers of $15 to $20 per hundred.

Harold Crigler, of Hebron, and Howard Taylor, of East Bend, represented the Boone County Farmer Boys at the State Fair at Louisville, last week. They entered on the grounds, were in charge of the Fair officials and were shown and instructed in everything at the fair and in several of the large factories in the city.

Jerome Carson, of Lucy creek, was in town Saturday, and when Our Mr. About Town asked him how he and he had made the crop that the recent rains they [illegible] and [illegible] to [illegible] to your notice. He from field of [illegible] a [illegible] in the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Flooding the Primary Law.

A dispatch from Springfield, Ky., reports a meeting of the Democratic committee in Washington county, at which the resignation of Mr. Scott Mayes as Democratic nominee for County Attorney was received, and Mr. [illegible] was nominated to succeed Mayes was nominated Attorney at the Au- [illegible] has since ac- [illegible] appointment as Co[illegible] at Louisville, at t[illegible] times the salary of Attorney of Washington.

All of this would seem as a matter of course were it not for the fact that the partisans who drew the direct primary law in Kentucky have undertaken to explicitly forbid exactly what Mr. Mayes and the Democratic committee in Washington county have done.

The Eaton-Thompson law as drawn, whatever its purpose attaches the independent action in politics. This law provides that none of the political parties shall nominate any but particans for office. Before the passage of the law Democrats frequently nominated Independents and Republicans indorsed Democrats. The direct primary law forbids this, declares political fusion a violation of the law in Kentucky, provided such fusion is attempted by any of the recognized parties.

After the law was drafted it occurred to somebody that its partisan provisions might be defeated by a candidate nominated at the direct primary resigning. None can qualify at the direct primary but partisans, but a loophole was left by the provision in the good old law that permitted a ty committee to fill all vacancies. It would have thus been possible after the direct primary, for certain candidates to withdraw and a party committee so to fill up the ticket as to give it the semblance of fusion.

To guard against such procedure a provision was written in the law forbidding candidates nominated at the August primary from withdrawing, and requiring all candidates upon qualifying before the primary to agree not to resign. It was also provided that except in case of death, the committee should not fill any vacancy that might take place on the ticket.

As will be easily understood Mr. Mayes has simply ignored these provisions of the law, and prefers to be Collector of Internal Revenue, and he declines point blank to be County Attorney of Washington county. The courts have sustained the primary law as a whole, and it would be interesting to know if some court upon proper application, would enter an injunction against Mr. Mayes requiring him to serve as County Attorney, no matter what he wants to do.

Also the case of the party committee in Washington county is to be considered. The Eaton-Thompson law says that the committee shall not fill this kind of vacancies, but the committee does it any way.

The provisions of the primary law to which we have referred are very foolish. They have been abrogated by Democrats without the slightest hesitation, altho they were attached to the law by a Democratic Legislature. If it can be done this way by Democrats, Republicans should be able to do the same thing.—Louisville Post.

Don't Sow Wheat too Early.

There is a tendency on the part of many farmers to rush things about this time of the year in order to get wheat seeding done. The idea seems to be prevaient that early seeding is the more desirable, even though common practice does not prove it to be so. The result of nine years of experience at the Ohio Experiment Station indicates that the best average yields are secured by seeding September 15 to 25. In years when outbreaks of the Hessian fly are feared seeding should be delayed considerably later. It is the early seeded wheat that is most injured by this pest.

Don't be in too big a hurry to sow wheat. Get the ground in good condition, well filled with organic matter and plant food, and the late seeded wheat will catch up with the early seeded and not run the risk of injury from the Hessian fly.

For wheat a firmly compacted bed with two or three inches of loose soil on the surface is better than an extremely fine soil. This is because wheat is usually sown in a dry soil when moisture must be conserved to the greatest extent possible. It is advisable to plant the crop as early as possible after harvest, give constant cultivation to keep and firm the soil as well as to destroy the weeds.

Mr. Wave Scalf, who lives on Mr James Strothers's farm [illegible] of town, killed one of the largest copperhead snakes [illegible] seen in this [illegible] discovered [illegible] door as it [illegible] the possession [illegible] Louisville [illegible] Courier-Journal.

Where Land Is Cheap.

The State Journal of Frankfort, discussing opportunities for farming, says that "there is still plenty of cheap land in Kentucky off of the automobile roads."

Quite so! And that is a rattling good augument for good roads. The fertility of soil is only one of the factors in making the price of farming land. "Location" is a large factor. Formerly that meant nearness to schools, churches, markets, railroads and neighbors. Nowadays it means accessibility. A farm that is five miles from schools, churches, markets or railroads with a good road covering the distance is more desirable, and is more salable, than an equally fertile farm two miles from such facilities but situated upon a poor road. And neighborhoods in these days of motor vehicles, stretch over whole counties if the roads are good. A drive of thirty or forty miles to dinner is no more, with a good road and an automobile than a drive of three or four miles over a road that is impassable for automobiles.

The expansion of neighborhoods as a result of increased facilities for transportation is perhaps the most desirable feature of the solution of country life. Where the roads are good a man need not buy 100 acres of land because it lies next to a farm owned by a family that seems easily agreeable. Even if the man driving a motor vehicle the prices of horse drawn vehicles and the cheaper motor vehicles have awakened his interest. Before automobiles became generally used Central Kentucky "terra incognita" to the Williams who were wide [illegible] Much of Kentucky [illegible] rolling [illegible] are no [illegible] automobiles [illegible] of the most at[illegible] [illegible] Courier-Journal.

Tips to Auto Owners.

A few inches of cinders watered and rolled down, make an excellent flooring for your dirt floor garage. The cinders absorb the escaped oil and gasolene; thus the danger of fire is diminished.

—o—

Always be sure that the spare parts carried on the car are of the proper size. What could be more annoying than to go to the "spare" compartment and pick out a needed part only to find that it was 1-8 inch too small or too large.

[illegible] is a saturated solution of turpentine in methylated spirit. The rubber articles desired to be preserved should be occasionally rubbed over with this mixture.

—o—

A careful motorist will always look carefully at his cars tires before washing the vehicle in order to make sure that all the shoes are properly inflated and that the knurled nuts on the valve stems are tight. If water happens to work its way in the casing, it will eventually rum it by rotting out the fabric.

—o—

It is no uncommon thing to find great spots of tar on the painted or varnished surface of a car's body work in these days of tarred or oiled roads. Cover the spot well with lard before taking a knife to scrape the tar so that you can remove it without great damage to the woodwork underneath.

—o—

An excellent compound for polishing the unpainted steel parts of the car, such as the tubing of the steering gear and the control rods, may be made by mixing soap and fine emery powder into a paste. This will remove any rust that may have formed and will leave the rod smooth without scratching it.

—o—

The practice of driving in ruts will wear out a tire almost faster than any other individual bad habit of motorists. This method of driving exposes to wear the part of the tire least intended to bear it. The main strength of the tire lies in the tread. The side wheels are made comparatively thin because wear on them is not expected, and yet by running in ruts that is exactly where the hardest wear fails. Then after the rubber has been worn off water and oil work their way in and the end of that tire is soon to come. This applies also to the practice of driving the car so close to the curb that the edges of the tires touch.

Milk Squirts.

Selling the young heifers that are from the best cows is moving backward in dairying.

Heifers bred too early always remain stunted in growth and their milk flow is shortened for all time.

The Ayreshire and Guernsey type of dairy cattle are increasing in favor in the Middle Western states.

The man with five cows and a separator is better off than his neighbor with eight cows and no machine.

The cow that comes fresh in the fall is really fresh twice during the year—the second time when grass comes in spring.

Don't imagine that the profits of the dairy business depend entirely upon the creamery and not upon the cows on the farm. The dairy must be right before the creamery can bring the money.

The [illegible]man who will sell off each [illegible] two or three of his poorest [illegible] will soon improve his [illegible] he replaces them by [illegible]d from his best cows.

Lest We Forget.

This year sees an impressive celebration of the victory that in 1813, Perry and his little fleet won over the British on Lake Erie.

It is natural and fitting enough to single out a decisive victory as the chief event to commemorate in celebrating the anniversary of an important war. But is it wise [illegible] for any nation—for this nation—or for any nation—to commemorate only its great victories? Would it not be well for a people to observe also the anniversaries of the great defeats that have marked its history? Defeats that have brought out the best that is in humanity, and a people [illegible] against [illegible] or cowardice or cow[illegible] and [illegible] there are [illegible] Americans [illegible] that [illegible] the [illegible] than for the [illegible] us, [illegible] a suc[illegible] On the [illegible] ted to the voters [illegible] election 1[illegible] prove. We feel [illegible] that the [illegible] vote or an [illegible]

[illegible] case of the party committee in Washington county is to be considered. The Eaton-Thompson law says that [illegible] or committee [illegible] their own borders. The blatant "jingoism" that preceded the war became political treachery and bickering. In too many cases greed and selfishness were more conspicuous than patriotism and devotion to the common cause.

All these things are a part of the history of the war. No good American should forget them, any more than he should forget the victories on the sea and the defense of New Orleans by Jackson and his men. The best kind of Americanism is not that which boasts all the time, or any of the time, but that which soberly recognizes the great truths of history—the warnings of past failure and defeat no less than the obligations that past victories have imposed.—Ex.

Two amendments to the constitution will be submitted to the voters at the November election. In their importance to the general public they overshadow everything else in the election. The first of these amendments is to permit a certain class of convicts to be worked on the roads. This was in the last Republican State platform and the demand for it was so great among the people that Gov. McCreary came out in favor of it on the stump. The work of making roads with convicts labor is no untried experiment. At least a dozen states are thus utilizing the prisoners of the state and everywhere with the best results. No state where it has been tried has ever abandoned it, in the South especially nearly all the good roads constructed in the last decade have been made with convict labor. The sentiment in Kentucky seems to be overwhelmingly in favor of the adoption of the amendment and it can only fail by those who favor it failing to vote. The other amendment is a provision which will permit the Legislature to revise our system of assessment and taxation. As our present system is inefficient and so ineffective a state could hardly worst by adopting this amendment a change. The voters will have a chance in having a [illegible] upon the statue books [illegible] unequal or unjust treatment the amendment is [illegible] November there is [illegible] time in Kentucky a [illegible] attached to the ballot [illegible] for the amendment [illegible] give the legislature [illegible] improve our taxing [illegible]

WOMEN OF LOUISVILLE

May Vote on the Proposed Issue of $1,000,000 School Bonds.

Frankfort, Ky., Sept. 11.—Thru an opinion of Attorney General Garnett, rendered today to Press Ray, Clerk of the Jefferson county suffrage is extended to the women of Louisville of legal age and qualifications on the matter of the $1,000,000 bond issue for more and better schools in that city.

Ray wanted to know if the women of Louisville should have a right to vote, and have a separate ballot to vote on the bond question.

Garnett says: "Section [illegible] of the constitution gave to the Legislature the right to determine the qualifications of [illegible] in the election of School Trustees and other common school district elections. The Legislature by Chapter 47 of the acts of 1912 gave to all women who can read and write, and who possess the legal qualifications of male voters, the right to participate in the election of School Trustees and other common school district elections. An election contemplated by the city of Louisville for the purpose of determining whether bonds shall be issued for schoolhouses and enlargement grounds is in my opinion a common school district election, and therefore follows that women would have the right to vote in this election."

For You and Your Wife

A cheerful, pretty bedroom will help you to start your day in a cheerful, pleasant mood. Its a haven of rest for you to come back to at night. And all day long its a pleasure to your wife.

To make a pretty bedroom it is more important to have tasteful furniture that harmonizes, than furniture that merely costs a lot. A brass bed, or a pretty iron bed if you prefer, dresser and chiffonier, a low rocking chair and one or two straight back chairs to match, a shirtwaist box, light colored rug on the floor,—all this does not cost vrey much, IF YOU BUY FROM US, and makes a truly pretty room. Come in and talk it over.

Don't forget to get a STEARNS & FOSTER mattress. That is what makes your bedroom a haven of rest. No other mattress is so comfortable.

Made in all grades of superiority; $9.00 upward. Windsor Grade at $13.50 is guaranteed SUPERIOR TO ANY OTHER ADVERTISED MATTRESS. We sell it on 60 nights trial. If you CAN part with it at the end of that time we will return your money without question or comment.

...Department ...of Agricul... ...pounds of butter are ...American farms annually ... amount of this is so ... as to bring only 14 to 15 ...er pound. First class ... is in great demand at ... 40 cents per pound. This ... is due mainly to the fact that ... creamery butter maker knows how to manage the cream and churn the butter; he removes the butter milk properly, does not overwork the butter and puts the product up in neat packages. There is no reason why butter made upon the farm should not only be equal to that made at the creamery, but should actually be superior. The creamery butter maker often has dirty milk and cream to work with and usually is not able to control the quality of the milk and cream which is brought to him. On the other hand the home butter maker has all of these factors under direct control. If by the exercise of a few easily applied principles, Kentucky farm butter makers could improve the quality of their butter so as to raise the price to that of creamery butter, this would mean the addition of millions of dollars to the income of Kentucky farmers.

One of the Best Types of Farm Churns.

The making of butter of high quality depends first upon cleanliness in performing every process from and during the drawing of the milk from the cow until the butter is printed and ready for the market. Cow hairs, dust and dirt must be avoided. The milkers' hands must be clean and the cows' udders previously cleaned either with water or with a clean damp rag. Utensils must always be washed and scalded before they are used. After the milk is drawn from the cow the cream should be removed at once with a cream separator provided as many as three or four cows are milked. The cream separator is a great cream saver and labor savor. However, excellent butter may be made when the cream is skimmed by hand. Assuming that a cream separator is used the cream should be cooled immediately after separation. Do not mix warm cream with cold cream as this will result in the entire mass of cream beginning to sour. The cream separator bowl should be carefully washed and scalded each time after it has been used.

When the cream is skimmed by hand the best plan is to use deep setting cream cans, these to be set in cold spring or well water having a temperature of 58 degrees or below, to allow the cream to rise. In order to avoid loss of cream it is desirable to skim the milk a second time. In hot weather churning should be done at least every other day.

The cream should be held at as cool a temperature as possible. A floating dairy thermometer costing 25 cents is a great help to the butter maker.

Before churning the cream should be properly ripened, as upon this will depend very largely the flavor and keeping quality of the butter. A temperature of 65 to 68 degrees will ripen cream in six to eight hours. Before churning, however, the cream must be cooled down to 55 to 60 degrees. A satisfactory method is to keep the cream in spring water at 58 to 60 degrees for 24 hours, stirring frequently. At the end of the ripening process it should have a distinctly rich, pleasant acid flavor and will be thick and velvety in in appearance. Sweet cream should not be added for at least six hours before the entire batch is churned, as this will result in the loss of considerable butter fat in the butter milk.

A hollow churn of the swinging or revolving type gives best results. Avoid churns having dashers, paddles or other interior devices as these injure the body and grain of the butter. Prepare the churn by first scalding in hot water and then rinsing in cold water.

Churning should be done at a temperature which will allow the butter to come in 20 to 30 minutes. Don't churn too warm, as this will mean large loss of butter fat and soft, oily butter, having a very poor body and texture.

STOCK FARMING BRINGS BIG SOIL IMPROVEMENT

(W. D. Nicholls, Animal Husbandry Department, Kentucky State University.)

The keeping live stock encourages crop rotation and the growing of grass and forage. In England where the land has been cultivated for nearly a thousand years the average wheat yield per acre is more than two and one-half times that of Kentucky, and the southern states. The fact that England is essentially a grass, hay and live stock country, accounts for its large crop yield. The growing of crops continually and selling them off of the land is bound to result in soil depletion.

Growing cotton continually on the same land has ruined thousand of farms in the South. Tobacco has had the same effect on Kentucky soil's, while too much corn has been the bane of soil fertility in the corn belt, and continual wheat raising has depleted the wheat fields of the great Northwest. In every case where this system has been practiced the soil has been depleted of humus and fertility and the land has been washed into gullies.

Crop rotation is a great aid in maintaining soil fertility, but can not be relied upon entirely. Even the best rotation will fail if all crops are taken off of the land and no plant food is returned in the form of manure or otherwise.

Stock farming and especially dairying allows most of the fertility contained in the crops to be returned to the farm. The cow returns in her manure 76 per cent of the nitrogen and 90 per cent of the phosphorous and potash contained in her feed. If the skimmed milk is fed to calves or pigs practically all the fertility is returned to the farm.

A ton of wheat worth about twenty-five dollars sold from the farm removes about seven dollars' worth of fertilizing elements. A ton of butter worth from five hundred to six hundred dollars removes less than one dollar's worth of plant food. This explains why dairying improves the land while grain farming exhausts it.

JUST A MITE TOO STRENUOUS

Marie Corelli's Idea of Love Draws Forth Some Criticism From American Periodical.

If I loved a man I should love him completely that I should never think of anything in which he did not be first and greatest share. I would see his kind looks in every ray of sunshine—I should hear his voice in every note of music—were to read a book alone, I would wonder which sentence in it would please him most—if I plucked a flower I should ask myself if he would like me to wear it—I should live through him and for him—he would be my very eyes and heart and soul.—Marie Corelli.

We want to thank you, Marie, for letting us know in time, but to be real candid we don't want to be loved your way; mighty few men do it all reads beautifully, but most men don't like the same kind of books their wives do. Most men hate to be sung to; and as for being the very eyes and heart and soul of any woman—not all the time. Even the best of us like to be left alone much of the time. When we marry we don't want to be strapped down to a 90-horsepower love car. In a life endurance test two people need to know each other not too well. It takes a lot of water to keep Niagara going. A marriage such as you indicate, Marie, would run out of power in two or three weeks.—Life.

Too Much Athleticism.

"As guardians of the public health, it is time for us to make a stand against this athletic craze," writes a medical correspondent. "The swinging of ponderous clubs and dumbbells, rowing heavy machines, pulling up weights, walking 15 or 20 miles a day chasing a golf ball, etc., are needless and injurious to anyone. As physicians, we prescribe moderate exercise for lymphatic and obese patients of torpid temperament, and a few educated movements to straighten up a deflected spine or round shoulders, etc., but we are careful to guard against fatigue. Such exercise is a very different thing from the severe and senseless efforts required by teachers in gymnastics and exercise fiends.

"If people would live long and healthy," says the correspondent, "they should take their exercise under the advice of a common-sense physician. The wrenching of muscles, tendons, ligaments, joints, nerves and bloodvessels," he proceeds, "is giving us all kinds of puzzling conditions, traumatic neuroses, dislocated viscera, etc., traceable to overexercise, if we only knew where to look for it."

Had Two Good Reasons.

Upton Sinclair said the other day in New York:

"Everybody is jumping up and saying that poverty, bitter and grinding poverty, has nothing to do with making girls go wrong. Well, for my part, I think that such assertions are too charitable toward modern social conditions, too charitable toward modern employers.

"Such charity reminds me of the young lady who asked:

"'Did pretty Tottie Footitas marry the septuagenarian Gobsa Goide for love or money?'

"'For both,' the young lady answered charitably, and she added, 'Lottie loves money, you know.'"

SPRAY MACHINE IS USEFUL

Power Furnace Through Nozzle and Can Move Over Fields—Uses for Spraying Outfit.

Two Missouri men have installed a useful farm machine for the spraying apparatus shown in the illustration. It is merely the water sprinkling tank put to other use. A Ford car has a tank mounted on the back and connected with a cross pipe with a series of nozzles about two feet apart on each side. The power from the Ford engine is forced into the tank and the solution is sprayed on the crops in all directions. The machine can be used for spraying fruit trees, potatoes, cotton, corn, or any other crop that requires spraying. It can be driven over the fields at any speed desired, and in every case the crop is sprayed with three rows at once. It is said that the machine will spray as much in a day as a man can spray in a week with the old hand pump.

Things to Measure.

The old science that things to measure have been given to the men at Cornell University. Experimentally, with the aid of the microscope, they have found that the number of stomata on the leaves of plants is governed by the amount of moisture in the air. Where the air is very moist, the stomata must be closed frequently to prevent all the moisture from escaping. Where the air is very dry, with a hot sun, they must be open most of the time, so that the plant may get enough moisture to keep it from wilting. Stomata are the breathing pores of the leaves.

HUSBAND RESCUED DESPAIRING WIFE

After Four Years of Discouraging Conditions, Mrs. Bullock Gave Up in Despair. Husband Came to Rescue.

Catron, Ky.—In an interesting letter from this place, Mrs. Bettie Bullock writes as follows: "I suffered for four years, with womanly troubles, and during this time, I could only sit up for a little while, and could not walk anywhere at all. At times, I would have severe pains in my left side.

The doctor was called in, and his treatment relieved me for a while, but I was soon confined to my bed again. After that, nothing seemed to do me any good. I had gotten so weak I could not stand, and I gave up in despair.

At last, my husband got me a bottle of Cardui, the woman's tonic, and I commenced taking it. From the very first dose I felt it was helping me. I can now walk two miles without its hurting me, and am doing my work."

If you are all run down from womanly troubles, don't give up in despair. Try Cardui, the woman's tonic. It has helped more than a million women, in its 50 years of wonderful success, and should surely help you, too. Your druggist has sold Cardui for years. He knows what it will do. Ask him. He will recommend it. Begin taking Cardui today.

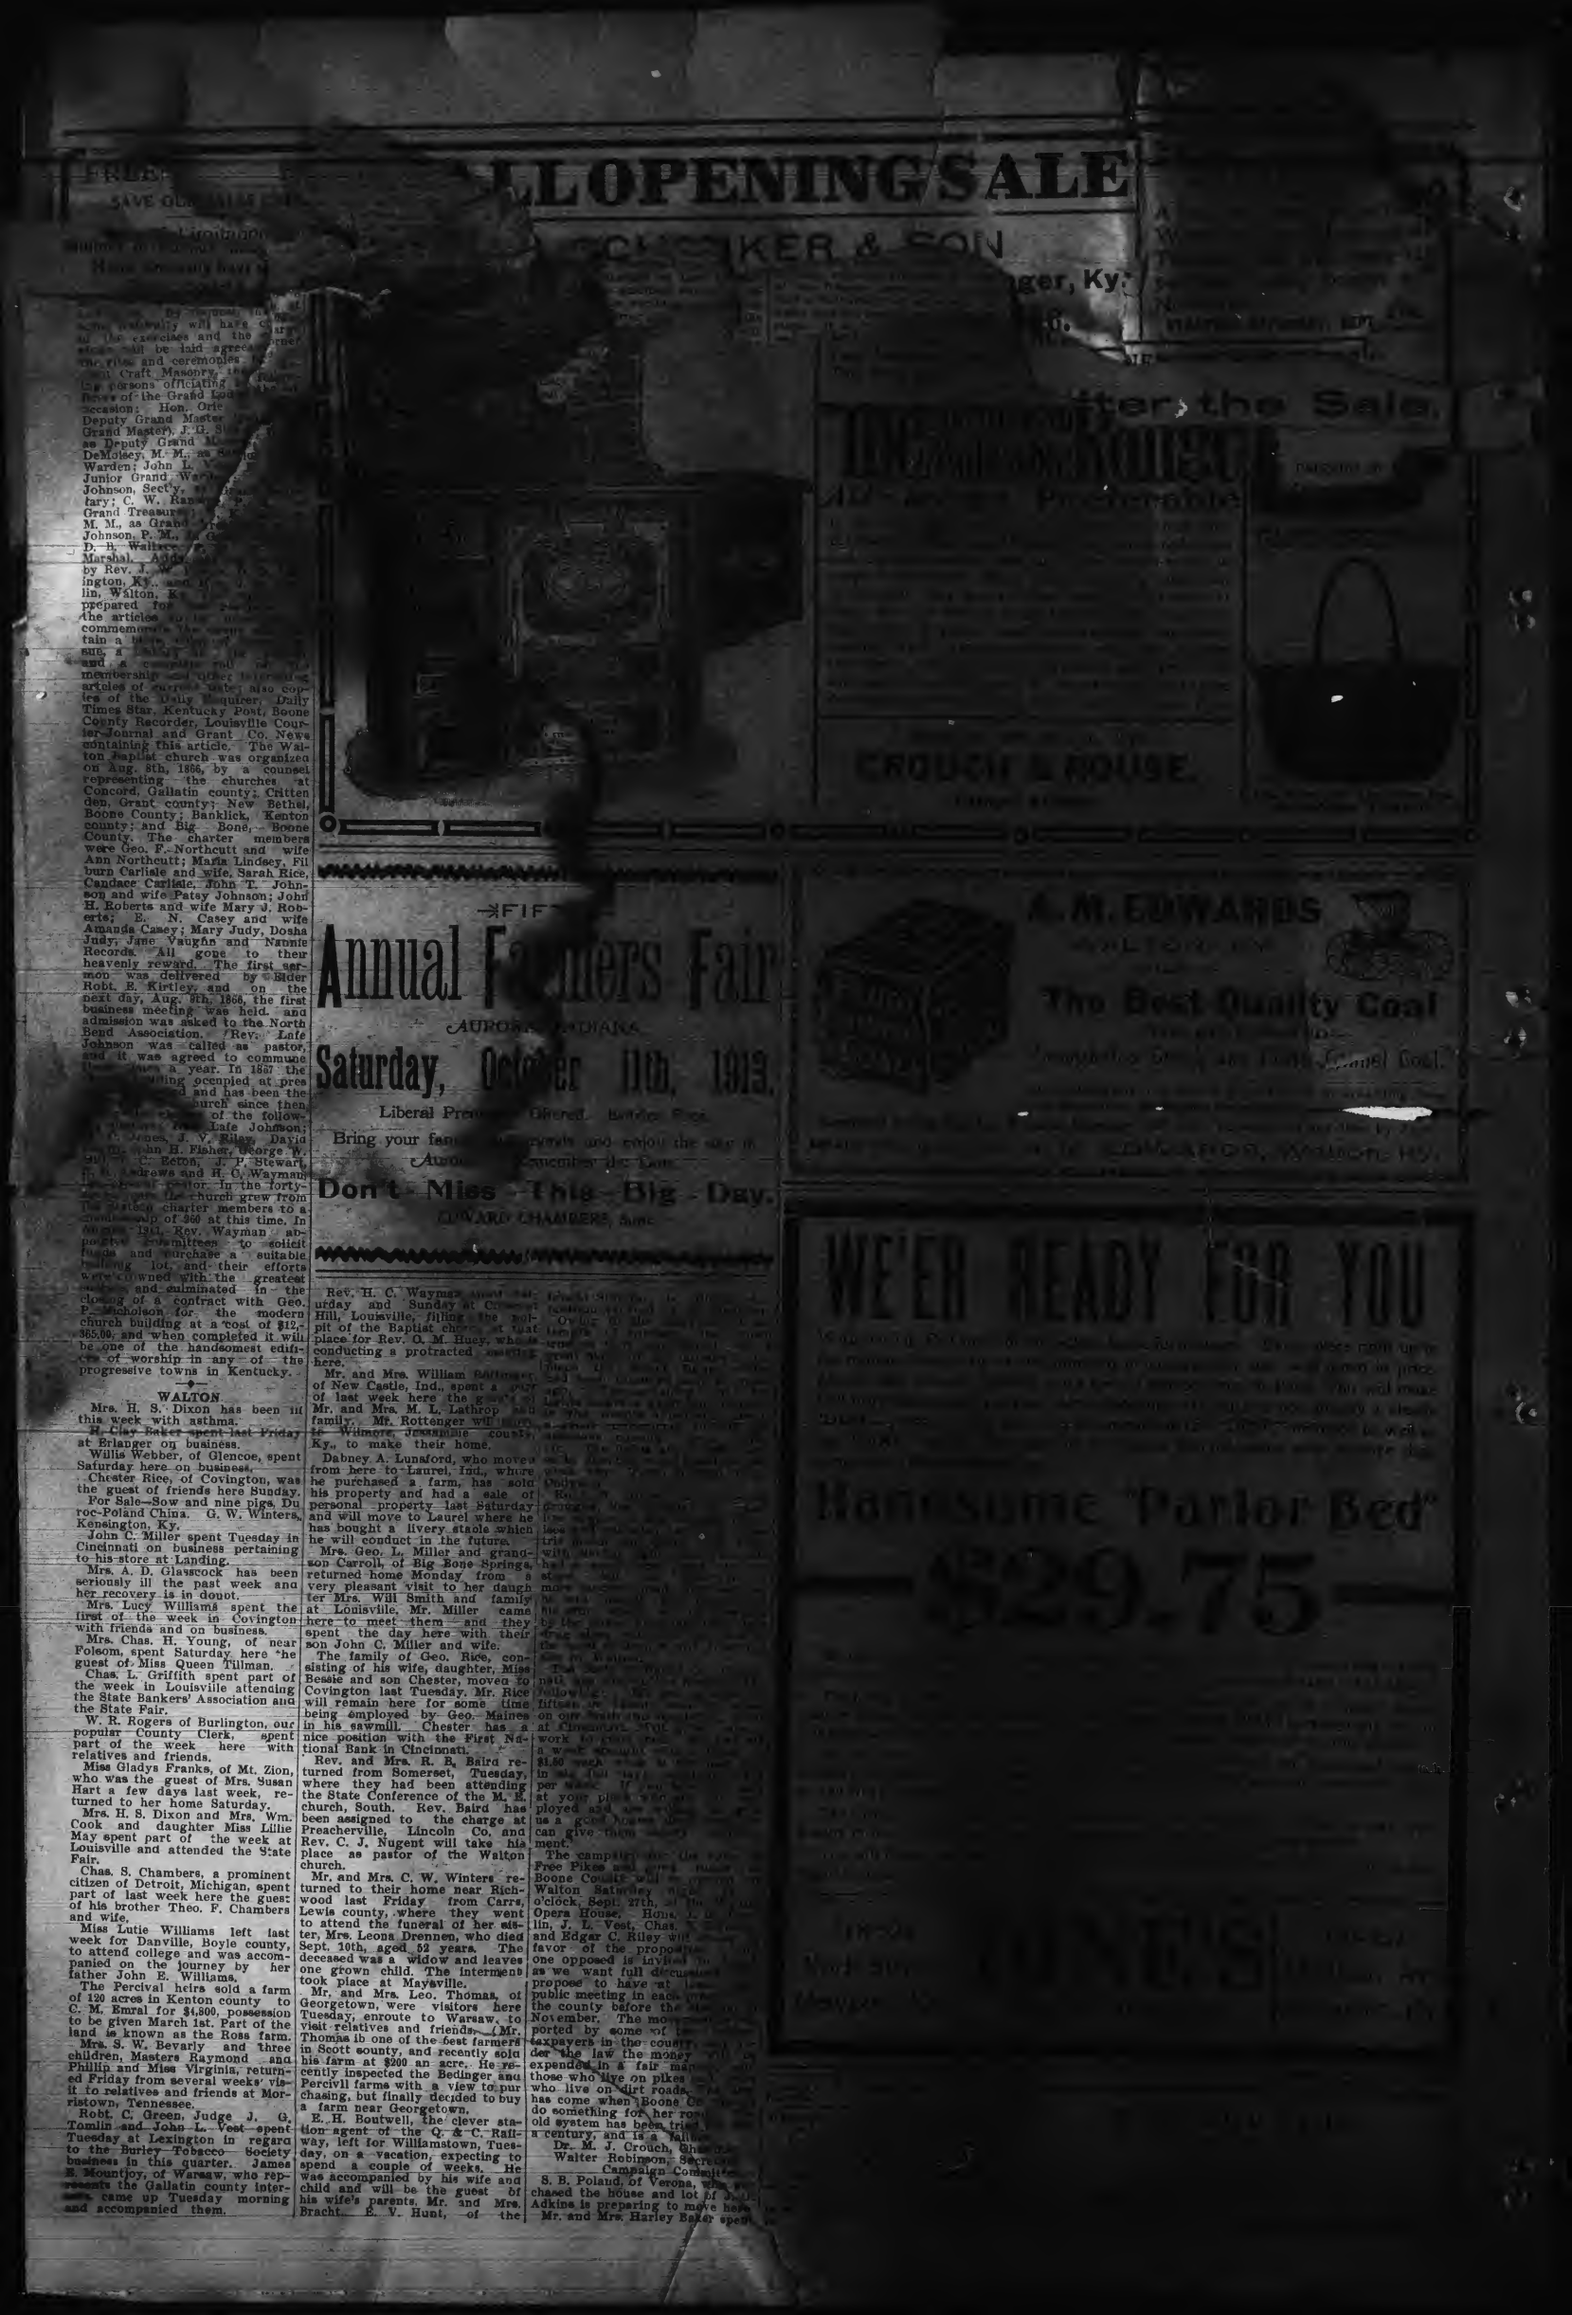
A treat for our readers that we have arranged for is a series of twelve illustrated articles on

The Panama Canal



and the

Isthmus in History and Romance

By Edward W. Pickard

Mr. Pickard is that type of globe-trotting author who seeks the quaint and curious places and people as subjects for his clever descriptive articles. In his present series of twelve articles which we have arranged to print, he has touched not only the actual work of building the canal, and the people who have accomplished it, but has gone into what the newspaper worker knows as the side lines, and which as a rule are of as much interest as the main story. This is particularly true in this case. After our readers have completed the last of Mr. Pickard's articles they will have a better understanding of the Panama Canal, and conditions within and surrounding the canal zone.

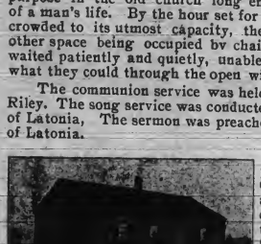
DEDICATION OF NEW CHRISTIAN CHURCH

Was the Mecca of Christian People of Boone County At Point Pleasant Last Sunday.



"The Latter House Shall Be More Glorious Than the Former, Saith the Lord of Hosts."

Upon the ground where the old Point Pleasant Christian Church stood for seventy-one years a new temple of worship now stands. On Sunday, September 28th, the friends of the congregation gathered there to witness and participate in the dicatory ceremonies. From far and near they came, in buggies and automobiles and on foot, much like and yet much different from the crowd that gathered for a similar purpose in the old church long enough ago to make the span of a man's life. By the hour set for the service the new edifice was crowded to its utmost capacity, the pews all being filled and all other space being occupied by chairs. Outside a goodly number waited patiently and quietly, unable to get in but willing to hear what they could through the open windows.

New Church Dedicated Sunday.

The communion service was held first, conducted by Edgar C. Riley. The song service was conducted by Dr. John Ernie Sullivan, of Latonia, The sermon was preached by Elder Harlan C. Runyan, of Latonia.

Old Church Built in 1839.

Elder Runyan spoke of the principles upon which the Church of Christ is built. He affirmed that they have not changed with the changes of time. But that in dedicating this new home of worship the worshippers hold to the same Bible, the same Christ, the same names that disciples have always worn. He referred to the days of the past, he looked into the future and he voiced the belief and the hope that "The Latter House Shall be More Glorious than the Former," at old Point Pleasant.

Five hundred dollars remained to be raised to finish paying for the new building. After the sermon, the work of raising this amount began. Here the friends of the cause showed forth their earnestness by subscribing so rapidly that before it could be accurately counted the five hundred dollar mark had been passed by some seventy dollars, and this before dinner.

The dedication proper was held in the afternoon. The afternoon services were all out doors. Standing upon the steps of the new building the speakers delivered their messages. S. S. Lappin, of Erlanger, and Bro. Runyan delivered addresses. Then Bro. Runyan made the dedicatory prayer.

Altogether it was a day well spent. Not only the Disciples of Christ, but members of many other denominations were there, differences forgotten, all brethren, rejoicing in the triumphs of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

NOTES.

The weather was ideal.

The attendance was estimated at from 300 to 500.

The church building is a credit to the neighborhood.

Everybody appeared to enter into the spirit of the occasion.

B. F. McGlasson's membership is the oldest in the congregation.

Elder Runyan, always entertaining, was at his best last Sunday.

Lutherans, Baptists and Methodist were present in large numbers.

W. C. Rouse was busy contributing to the comfort of the congregation.

The man with a camera was there and took several pictures during the day.

A large number of Ludlow people were present, many of whom arrived for the afternoon services.

Spencer Tanner was kept busy nearly all day seeing that the vehicles and autos were properly parked.

There being no shade trees in the church yard will prompt the cultivation of nice young trees at proper points.

The congregation was sorry when time called a halt on Elder Runyan's discourse both before and afternoon.

To the Ladies Society of the church is due a great deal of the credit for the raising of the money for the building.

Malchus Souther brought a spring wagon load of provision and then assisted the ladies materially in the work of serving the dinner.

The new edifice will accommodate a larger congregation than the old one could, while its furnishing will make it decidedly more comfortable.

Intense was the attention given Elder Runyan and the other speakers in the afternoon when addressing the large audience from the door step.

There is no trace left of the old school building in which Pt. Pleasant Christian church was organized. The building disappeared many years ago.

The committee was surprised when it found how readily the audience was responding to its requests for contribution with which to cancel the church debt.

Erlanger sent a considerable delegation, and among them were the most liberal contributors when money was being raised to liquidate the church debt.

The members of the Pt. Pleasant Christian church are justly proud of their new house of worship, which will probably stand for a century to come.

Elder Runyan was made quite a generous donation of money with which to pay his expenses incurred attending the meeting of Christian churches in Toronto, Canada.

The dinner was abundant and its preparation was culinary perfection. It was contributed by every household in the vicinity, and especial care was taken to see that everyone present partook.

Atty. Harper Rucker was on the ground early and made himself generally useful. It was his grandfather Harper who laid the brick for the church edifice that was replaced by the one dedicated Sunday.

It had been a long time since the citizens of Pt. Pleasant neighborhood passed a day so replete with real genuine enjoyment. Those not members of that church rejoiced with their neighbors in the dedication of their new house of worship.

Several Waltons, Riggses and Frank McGlasson, descendants of the original Pt. Pleasant church congregation were present at the dedication, and were proud of the new building that will perpetuate the memory of their ancestors for years to come.

The building will be heated by a hot air furnace and lighted by an acetalyne light plant located in the large basement, where a Sunday school room will be prepared and properly furnished. The church Sewing Circle will also have quarters in the basement.

B. S. Smashey, of the Lawrenceburg Press, one of the best newspaper men in this part of the country, attended the dedication. Mr. Smashey is very fond of taking a long walk every nice Sunday, his objective point always being a religious meeting. He has made other hikes into Kentucky to attend church services.

On account of the Institute there will be no white schools taught in this county next week.

This writer accompanied the local ball club to Petersburg Saturday and witnessed one of the most exciting games of the season. In the first inning Ruth, first man up for Pete, got first on an error, Sandford gave Bradburn four wide ones, the only man he walked in the game; Ryle struck out, Aylor hit long fly to center which was captured by Berkshire, and Ruth started home from third after the catch and Berkshire made a wild throw, letting both runners score, and Petersburg rooters went wild. F. Berkshire fanned for the third out. The locals scored one in the fourth when Conner, Sandford and Louden singled in succession, Conner scoring. Nothing more doing in the scoring line until the seventh, when, after two were out, Deck got a single and scored on Berkshire's three bagger over center. Score now a tie and excitement at fever heat. Petersburg got their first hit off Sandford in their half of this inning. Boone Ryle first man up singled, Aylor struck out, Berkshire was thrown out on an easy roller to short and McWethy fanned. Neither side did much until the tenth inning when Deck, first man up for the locals, singled and was out trying to make third when Berkshire singled and went to second on the out. Ryle out at first Clore singled, scoring Berkshire with the winning run as Pete could do nothing with Sandford in their half. Hits—Belleview 11, Petersburg 2; struck out—by Sandford 18, by Fromholtz 12, base on balls—off Sandford 1, of Fromholtz 1; errors—Belleview 4, Petersburg 2. Next Saturday the locals expect to have the crowd of the season here as Lawrenceburg plays here, the team that shut the locals out in a former game. Sandford will pitch for Belleview and Fromholtz or Bachelor for the visitors.

There was some speculation on the part of the fans Saturday as to whether Willard Clore could catch Sandford but the little fellow got everything and his throwing to second was perfect cutting down several attempted steals in great style. Sandford, who has seen some great catchers, said after the game that he would have to hand it to Clore as a great little catcher.

NOTES FROM MEADOWBROOK FARM

By William Pitt

Build a silo.

Give the hogs free range.

Don't let the weeds go to seed.

Never leave a boot on a horse over night.

the horse. It will help keep him drains too near the surface eat mistake.

In a dry season the value of a silo is especially appreciated.

Prepotency in the sire is not assured until proven in the offspring.

It takes more than a few weeks' drought to put alfalfa out of business.

Fumes of ammonia from reeking piles of manure will injure a horse's eyes.

Plan to take good care of the fall pigs. They have a hard enough time at best.

Teach the colts to walk well and you will lay the foundation for all the faster gaits.

One part of cedar oil to two parts of vaseline is an excellent treatment for sore head.

Heavy shoes on horses are not necessary on the farm. Light shoes make it easier for them.

Be careful with the mares in foal, and don't let them slip down nor hold heavy loads downhill.

Sweet clover seed is at a premium —a bushel will give the boy some appreciated spending money.

Sheep that are kept as scavengers soon assume the appearance that their purpose would signify.

Do not let the horses cool off too suddenly after hard work or driving, as the nights begin to grow cool.

You can make a young sheep, but it is not so well to do it as to wait till ram and ewe are well-developed.

The feed and care of the brood sow before farrowing time has much to do with the health and vigor of the litter.

The dairy industry is a rapidly growing one, and a dairyman to succeed must be ready to meet up-to-date conditions.

With lambs it is better to feed and have them a little hungry at each meal than to have them off their feed for a week.

The expense of caring for a mule is less than for a horse. He eats less, requires no blanketing, no stall, and is more easily kept clean.

Mutton can be raised cheaper than any other meat, because the wool can be made to almost, if not altogether pay the expense of its production.

Every up-to-date farmer should have a silo. He owes it to his stock and what is more he loses money every day that passes until a silo is erected.

A good horse will always command a good price, no matter how popular the automobile becomes, and this applies to draft, harness and saddle horses alike.

Lice multiply rapidly in hot weather if nothing is done to check them. The dusting will help greatly. Spade up a spot in a shady corner and watch the hens enjoy themselves.

Don't allow your horse to go too long without shoeing. You can train the shape of the foot easier by keeping him well shod and prevent trouble arising from shoes remaining on too long.

A little extra care with a good feed of wheat at night will soon bring the egg supply up to what it was in the spring months. The eggs are much better in price now than they were in the spring also.

Hominy feed or hominy chops consists of the hull, germ and part of the starch of corn grains, and contains less starch, about the same amount of protein and more fiber and fat than corn meal.

Three grains of nitrate of potash [illegible] in a little warm milk three [illegible] day will greatly assist in [illegible] constipation in hogs. This [illegible] to every hogs. If given to [illegible] about three Neglect of pigs is fatal.

Chickens enjoy a dust bath.

Rye is a poor chicken grain.

Errors in pig feeding are costly.

The early bean catches the worm.

Second-growth pasture is fine for sheep.

No plants set too thick can fruit its seed well.

It is claimed that a single combed fowl fattens best.

Sows kept for breeders should be given lots of exercise.

Ground grain is better for feeding both young and old ducks.

While the pigs suckling, feeding the sow means feeding the pigs.

The shorter the fattening period the greater the profit from the pen.

Old ewes, and inferior ones, should be fattened and sold for mutton.

Much farm machinery wears out more through exposure than through use.

If the bees are to be wintered outdoors, use chaff or double-walled hives.

An orchard neglected while young will at its best be only a second-class orchard.

There is nothing the matter with the hen that shows a bright eye and red comb.

The deep, narrow silo will usually furnish better silage than the low, broad type.

Try a shovelful of ashes in the bottom of each nest box to help keep down vermin.

Skim milk is good for all kinds of hogs, but is better adapted for growth than for fattening.

Free range for the hogs does not mean that your neighbor's farm should be their pasture.

Whether the grass in the pasture is short or not, the calves will like a bit of hay to nibble on.

The waste of an ordinary section grain farm will fatten a carload of steers; why not utilize it?

Nearly every form of insect life that is injurious to field, garden, orchard or forest, is preyed upon by birds.

Pigs that have become too fat by overfeeding and lack of exercise should not be chosen for breeders.

There are a lot of ways in this country of bounty to lift the mortgage; and the least of these is not the hen.

Get rid of all the surplus old hens. This will be a saving in both feed and house room. The growing stock need that.

If the horses have had hard, straining work, or hard driving, when put in the stable the legs should be well rubbed.

A little money might be profitably invested in filling some of the low spots that cause trouble in the spring of the year.

Any man who takes a pride in doing things well will keep his cream clean, cool and sweet—is helping to upbuild his local creamery.

Always water your horse before feeding. You can teach him to drink then, by not offering water at feeding, thereby avoiding possible colic.

Keeping your horses' feet trimmed in good shape saves putting shoes on them. Horses' feet do not require irons except when on rough or hard roads.

Dampness and contaminated ground are fruitful causes of poultry diseases. The quarters should be as dry as a chip and the ground in the runs perfectly pure.

By mixing a little alfalfa seed with the clover and timothy every time one seeds down to grass, it will be possible to soon have the whole farm inoculated with alfalfa bacteria.

Wheat furnishes more material for the white of eggs than corn. One bushel of wheat contains about one-tenth more protein than a bushel of corn, but about one-half less fat.

Do not breed the young sow until she is nine months old and then keep her breeding regularly two litters a year until she begins to decline from old age or is proved a poor brood sow.

Red raspberries are propagated by suckers which come up around the old plants. These may be taken up in the autumn, heeled in during the winter and set out in a permanent bed the next spring.

Fresh eggs find ready buyers and command respect. Bad eggs cause trouble. Spoiled eggs go to the tanners. Condemned eggs, though not spoiled, are sold to the factory for printing calico. Cracked eggs are often sent to the packing houses, where they are separated and canned.

ARE TARGETS FOR CRANKS.

Prominent Public Men at the Capital Receive All Kinds of Freak Letters.

Should all other thrills in life fail the persistent plaint of the freak letter writer would be sufficient to furnish all of the interest that men in public life could desire. This the writer found after a tour of the government departments and the capitol; a tour which revealed the fact that freak correspondents are demanding that congressmen and cabinet officials perform about everything performable, from organizing a matrimonial bureau to abolishing the army.

Of course, the president is the chief victim of these epistolary freaks; but he rarely enjoys the pleasure of perusing them. Patient Joseph Tumulty, his man Friday, examines the White House mail and carefully tucks away those missives which bear the hall marks of fanaticism of foolish fancy.

Among the demands made upon the president by correspondents has been the abolition of certain religions, the issue of a life pension to a talented individual who announces himself as the inventor of a principle for storing electricity in the brain and the extermination of insect life. There are constantly floating into the White House documents of a most impressive appearance which when opened read like the minutes of the Imbeciles' club.

Although the president is the shining target of the eccentric correspondent, there are plenty of others to share his grief with him. There is hardly a prominent man in congress who has not some time or other received a letter which materially raised the hair of his hard-working secretary and caused the office stenographer to claw the air rapidly.

Courage Is Needed By Poultry Folks.

Poultry folks need lots of courage to meet the misfortunes that come to them every year.

The poultry editor receives letters daily filled with woe. If a man is getting along nicely he never writes the editor about it. On the contrary, let his birds fall ill, let the fertility run low, let the chicks die before three weeks old, and he at once sits down and writes a four page letter. As a physician sees the dark side of common life, so the poultry expert hears the hard side of raising chicks and handling hens. These difficulties are not the same every year, but vary from season to season.

One year it is white diarrhoea, another year it is roup, and still another the fowls are going light—and so it goes.

The present season it has been roup, in its many phases, poor hatches and weak chicks. Roup is a great destroyer and when it gets a firm hold upon a flock it is hard to make it let go. One fact stands out vividly before the writer. The after effects of roup make the hens that have had it very poor layers and brooders in the future. It is best to get rid of every fowl that has had a severe case of it; change the runs, and make the sleeping quarters of the hens roup-proof. It can be done and should be.

To meet the complaints that come in every day, or week, one needs to go back to the A. B. C. of poultry keeping. It takes thought and knowledge to be a success with poultry today. He must learn his lesson in some way and too often it is though the hard knocks of experience. There are so many things to learn and methods to unlearn. There is a profit in poultry, we know whereof we speak. Whether the profit be large or small, depends in a large measure, how the poultry man meets his difficulties. Foresight is far better than hindsight, and the fellow who wants to keep in the game has got to keep his eyes open, and take every opportunity to gain facts. —Farmers' Home Journal.

Seed Wheat.

Begin now to assure next year's harvest—plow deep, save the moisture, scatter the manure.

More alfalfa means more home-grown feed and smaller feed bills. It naturally leads to better profits.

Don't blame anyone but yourself if your farm won't grow legumes. They will grow for the man who knows how to make them.

The farmer who has never used a fanning mill should get one as soon as possible, so as to get well acquainted with it before the busy season comes.

It is not bad practice to treat the wheat seed to a liquid spraying of one pound of formaldehyde in forty gallons of water. It will prevent the smut damage.

Build silos, grow less acres of corn, but utilize the whole crop in its best form, and grow alfalfa on the corn acreage saved for a cheap, palatable home grown balancer for corn.

After all real science in farming, just as in everything else, means nothing more than knowing things. Without the knowledge there can be no science.

Get the best seed wheat obtainable to sow this fall. Look around awhile before you decide on the seed you sow the better the seed you sow the better will be your wheat crop. It pays to plant the plumper berries.

Which Shall Wife Wash?

Which cream separator bowl does the wife prefer to wash?

On the left are four styles of common "bucket bowls" used in ordinary cream separators. On the right is a light, simple, sanitary Sharples Dairy Tubular bowl of the same capacity—used only in Sharples Tubular Separators.

These illustrations were made from actual photographs. Notice the weights—count the pieces. The Sharples Tubular bowl contains but one piece, and that piece is smooth, instantly removable and about the size and shape of a napkin ring. The Tubular bowl can easily be perfectly cleaned in three minutes.

Yet makers of "bucket bowls"—barred by patents from making or using Tubular bowls—say "bucket bowls" are as easy to clean, and wear as long, as Tubular bowls.

Take another look at the picture. Show it to your wife. Which had she rather wash? Which do you think will wear the longest. We sell Sharples Tubular—the finest cream separators and surest money makers made. Bring your wife and look at one.

WAR ON HOG CHOLERA

Serum Developed by Department of Agriculture Used.

Cleaning Up of Infection Is Huge Job, But Believed Can Be Accomplished Same as Eradication of Ticks in South.

Beginning with a few counties in Iowa and Indiana, the department of agriculture is commencing a campaign for the eradication of hog cholera. As this disease is as widespread as the hog raising industry, which covers the whole country, the cleaning up of the infection is a large order. It is believed, however, that it can be done in much the same way that the cattle tick is being eradicated from the south.

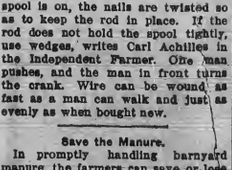
Before the tick eradication work started it was feared that it was an impossible task. The experts of the department, however, figured out methods of cattle dipping, pasture rotation and other means of control so that now a quarter of the area in the south that formerly was under strict cattle quarantine has been declared tick free and released. Counties adjoining the cleared territory have seen the benefit and are taking up the work so that eventually the impossible will be accomplished and the whole of the south will be turned into a cattle-raising country.

It is thought that the same thing can be done with hog cholera. Congress last year appropriated $75,000 to start the work. The beginning in Iowa will be in co-operation with the Iowa State college. The method used will be the serum that was developed by Doctor Dorsett of the department of agriculture.

Hog cholera is by all odds the greatest scourge of the hog-raising industry. It was estimated that it cost the farmers last year $60,000,000. Before the discovery of the serum treatment the toll was still larger. Cholera was regarded as inevitable and was almost always fatal. There was no protection against it except segregating the well hogs, and this precaution was uncertain.

The injection of the serum gives immunity from attack even on close contact. The immunity is not permanent, but it lasts long enough to allow cleaning up an entire community. It was estimated that the second year the serum was in use it saved about $11,000,000. Now many of the states are manufacturing the serum in their own agricultural laboratories and distribute it free on application.

The plan for cleaning up the country is to commence on county areas, as is being done in Indiana and Iowa, and gradually spread the work, cleaning up in widening circles and preventing the importation of the disease by careful quarantine. Any specific local outbreak will be wiped out as quickly as it can be located.



It may be the work of years to get all the country cleaned, but it is believed once it is cleaned it can be kept so. This will mean a great increase in the hog-raising industry, larger profits and a proportionate reduction in the price of meat.

REWINDINNG OF BARBED WIRE

Excellent Use May Be Made of Old Buggy Axle and Wheels—Two Men Required to Operate.

The sketch shows a very useful device for winding loose wire and taking up old wire fences. Procure an old buggy axle and wheels, and fasten two two-by-four sticks five feet long to the axle as illustrated.

Provide that front end with a rod, the end of which is bent to form a crank. Two bent nails hold the block which had to be cut out to allow the rod to be put in place. When the spool is on, the nails are twisted so as to keep the rod in place. If the rod does not hold the spool tightly, use wedges, writes Carl Achilles in the Independent Farmer. One man pushes, and the man in front turns the crank. Wire can be wound as fast as a man can walk and just as evenly as when bought new.

Save the Manure.

In promptly handling barnyard manure, the farmers can save or lose hundreds of dollars annually. A manure heap is a hot bed of bacterial activities. Some of the nitrogen is formed into ammonia and passes into the air; this is a clear loss. Some is transformed into nitrates, which are soluble. These are washed out by rains and sink into the soil or run off into the ditch; this also is a direct loss. Some is formed by bacteria into nitrates and these nitrates attacked by another species of bacteria which change into nitrogen gas, which passes into the air and is lost.

Hint for Horsemen.

Never start to lead the horse from his stall till you hold or fasten back the door. Doors have been known to swing to where they were not fastened open, catching the horse's head, the animal pulling back and breaking his neck.

EXCELLENT HAY RACK LIFT

Much Manual Labor May Be Saved by Use of Device Shown in Illustration—How Worked.

(By J. WESLEY GRIFFIN.)

Much heavy lifting may be avoided by having a place on which the hay rack may rest when not in use. By making a support something like the one shown in the drawing, not only the heavy lifts may be avoided but much time saved. I have known as many as three men to lose an hour each, going to and from the field, just to change a wagon body and the hay frame. This was at a time when time was valuable, more so than other times. With a lift like this one, or something similar, one man can change frames with ease and dispatch.

All one has to do is to drive between the posts at the lower end. The rack will be lifted from the wagon as the team draws it through. The lift should be the same height at the top of the lowest posts, as the top of the wagon wheels, the rear ones, then the rack is raised above the wheels the wagon will pass out, leaving the rack high and dry.

When ready to load the rack, simply drive between the posts, under the rack, and slip back the rack, at the same time back the wagon. As soon as the rear of the rack rests on the wagon, stand on the rear of the rack and your weight will hold the rack in place while the team is backed far enough to let the front of the rack fall in place.

MONEY IN QUINCE GROWING

There Is Unlimited Demand for Them and Fruit Is Neglected More Than Any Other.

Two acres of quinces ought to make more money for the farmer than 20 acres of apples, according to J. C. Whitten, professor of horticulture in the Ohio College of Agriculture, in a lecture to the pomology class.

"The quince is more neglected in proportion to its merits than any of our orchard fruits," he said. "Nobody ever saw an overplus of quinces. There is an unlimited demand for them. If the farmer has a place where they will do well, the crop properly handled will pay better than any of our orchard fruits. The fruit is the firmest we have to ship, the most handsome and the best keeper."

According to Professor Whitten, quince-growing has never had a boom. "This is because the quince grown under ordinary treatment, as most of our apples and other fruits are grown, does not have a good flavor and is poor in quality. The trees must have individual care and expert treatment. It requires the greatest skill to select the right site for the orchard. If properly handled, pruning, spraying and picking are easier than in our other orchards.

"When cooked the quince is the best of our core or stone fruits. For preserves, jellies and the like, the quince is the richest, most highly flavored and the most delicious fruit we have."

SELF-BOILED LIME SULPHUR

Expert of Alabama Experiment Station Gives Some Excellent Advice on Spray Material.

Writing in regard to the use of self-boiled lime-sulphur solution to combat the San Jose scale, Dr. W. E. Hinds of the Alabama experiment station says:

"We cannot depend upon the heat of the lime to produce a combination that will be effective as a winter wash against San Jose scale. . . . I fear that the writers recommending this, confuse the preparation of self-boiled lime sulphur for summer use for brown rot with the fire-boiled wash for the scale. An ineffective wash means waste of the materials, labor and perhaps the ruin of the orchard also.

"There is, of course, latitude for some variation in the proportion of lime and sulphur, ranging between fifteen pounds and twenty pounds of earth. Considering the danger of getting a poor grade of lime, and the cheapness of that material, I believe it advisable to use slightly more lime than sulphur. I would advise eighteen or twenty pounds of lime and fifteen pounds of sulphur to make fifty gallons of wash. It is necessary to boil this for at least thirty minutes, and better, for forty-five or more, to get the most effective wash."

Rape for Fall Feed.

Rape sown at the rate of two pounds to the acre in the cornfield when the last plowing has been done, or even later, will often furnish a wealth of fall feed for sheep, swine and cattle other than milch cows. Such a plan is especially good if "hogging off" corn is considered.

Lambs will eat the rape and not waste any of the corn, and will produce meat at a minimum of expense. It will be advisable to snap or husk the corn before any other animals are turned into the field.

"I raised 8,130 pounds of tobacco on three and one-eighth acres year before last, and have increased my wheat yield seven bushels to the acre, and this year I expect to raise right at 100 bushels of corn to the acre on a nine-acre block by following the instructions given in bulletins furnished by both State and national Departments of Agriculture," said W. M. Henry, of Onton, to the editor of the News Saturday. Mr. Henry went on to speak of the fact that farmers could greatly help their crop yield by following instructions given free of charge in the farmers' bulletins furnished by the State and Uncle Sam. He has demonstrated this fact by experience. —Sebree News.

The seed corn proposition promises to be a serious one next planting time. The present crop is hardly fit for planting. Only under exceptional conditions has a crop developed in this section that is fit to be used for seed. Prominent farmers who plant large acreages each year are very much worried about the outlook, and those having old corn on hand are making the best crib selections from possible and putting it by for next year's dependence. Excellent seed corn can always be bought, but all seed corn that is bought is not excellent, and one never knows when he is getting it good or bad. Besides the price of seed corn will be up next spring because so many people who usually raised their own will be in the market, and the seed corn raisers are having just as hard a time as any other corn raisers this dry weather.—Winchester Sun

High Prices In Sight.

Lexington.—In a review of the tobacco situation E. T. Robbards, tobacco expert and statistician, says manufacturers are confronted with conditions unknown in history of trade for half a century.

Widespread drouth resulted in a short crop. He says that all the stock of burley held by the Cincinnati and Louisville dealers will have been exhausted by January 1st, next depriving the small manufacturer of his source of supply to a great extent. There is no old tobacco, he says, in the country and large manufacturers have only enough to run them for a year.

His report includes the significant statement:

"Beyond doubt the 1913 tobacco crop is from 50,000,000 to 75,000,000 pounds short of absolute annual requirements, which will mean that there will be most strenuous efforts put forth by large manufacturers to corner the available supply, resulting in the keenest competition and soaring of prices."

PROSPERITY.

[Cincinnati Enquirer]

The cash that will flow into the South Atlantic and Eastern Gulf states during the next twelve months will make them the scene of the utmost business activities, and close as they are to Cincinnati our business men will find in that section great opportunities for their commercial operations.

The cotton and corn crops of North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida and Alabama, are very great. Tennessee's are in very fair condition, while the damage done to cotton in Oklahoma, Texas and Arkansas, to corn in Kansas, Oklahoma, Missouri and Nebraska, will keep up the prices of both cotton and corn in every market in the world.

Their local weather conditions have made great crops for the South Atlantic States and those of the Eastern Gulf, while the conditions in the states west of the Mississippi have aided in advancing the prices upon both cotton and corn.

The most prosperous region of the South lies at the very door of Cincinnati, and the manufacturers of the state of Ohio have in this vast domain a market this year for their outputs far beyond that afforded them in any year of the past.

West Virginia, Eastern Kentucky, Southwestern Virginia and Eastern Tennessee will surpass all their records in value of outputs of timber, coal and other natural products, while the great agricultural resources of these states and their neighbors to the south will yield to the producers the greatest amounts in cash that they have ever received.

Passing for this article all reference to the potential influences of the Panama Canal and the huge business which will come to these states from its operation, confining our observation simply to agricultural, commercial and industrial conditions now prevailing in the states named they are such as to make a record-breaking year of prosperity for the people residing therein.

Florida comes to the front this year with one of the largest orange crops that the state has ever produced, and that fruit will be marketed in a season when it is admitted that the California crop will be hundreds of thousands of boxes short of nomal production.

The demand for Florida grapefruit grows with every year, the state's crop of cotton, of corn, of tobacco, of vegetables, will be larger than ever before, while her industries and commerce are showing remarkable growth.

Florida lands are naturally enhancing in value with increase of population and demonstration of the profits that lie in their cultivation, and this is true of everyone of the states in the section we speak of.

The prosperity of the twenty millions of people who reside to the southeast and south of the Ohio cannot fail to be a great contributing factor to the prosperity of the people of our own state, united, as they are, to them by such close financial, commercial and social ties. It is a great factor in the prosperity of the public.

Lucky Escape.

Last Monday as Elmer Goodridge and his cousin, Miss Olivette Foster, were coming from the city, the mare attached to the buggy scared at an auto truck on the pike this side of the first toll gate out on the Florence pike and upset the vehicle, but fortunately neither of the occupants received a scratch. Getting loose from the buggy the mare came through Burlington at the top of her speed, paying no attention to efforts to stop her, continuing to run for a mile and a half out on the Belleview pike, where Bud Brafford met her in the road and succeeded in stopping her. She was nearly exhausted and only a remnant of harness remained on her. Mr. Brafford brought the mare back to Burlington where in about an hour, [illegible] to another buggy [illegible] nothing

DEFINITE PERIODS TO PRUNE

Popular Subject for Individual Disputes as Practically Every Month Has Its Advocates.

The best time to prune trees has always been a popular subject for individual dispute. Practically every month in the year has its advocates. This fact indicates that there may be some truth in the old loose-jointed rule that the time to prune is when the saw is sharp. At any rate we may inter that under certain conditions, prunning may be safely done at any time of the year. However, it is best always, even in the care of the home orchard to have two definite periods during the year in which to prune; once during the dormant season, from November to April and once in the height of the growing season, along in June.

Both winter and summer pruning have their advocates, but the object to be gained in pruning really should be the determining factor, as the effects of the two is almost opposite. Winter pruning tends to check the growth of fruit buds, and encourages wood growth, including the formation of water sprouts. On the other hand summer pruning promotes the formation of fruit buds, and checks the wood growth. Sometimes these results are very marked, but usually are not conspicious enough to attract attention of the grower.

There is always much more time in the winter to do the work—an important consideration on the general farm. The men also usually do the pruning better, and the brush can be disposed of more easily. There is also time to paint over and care for the wounds caused by the pruning. But in early summer the wounds heal better, it is much easier to detect diseased or dead branches, and some waste growth may be saved. The physiological effect on the tree may also be much more satisfactory.

However, it is not so much a question of when to prune in most of our smaller orchards as it is the one of getting it done at all. While in many cases summer pruning would prove advantageous, yet the problem is to get the orchard owner to first see the advantage of pruning even during the idle winter period, he can be expected to spend many of the busy summer hours at this work.

PENITENTIARY DOORS

Open to Convict Who Was Sent Up For Life Granted Pardon By Govenor McCreary.

Frankfort, Ky., Sept. 25.—August Koors, of New York, formerly of Covington, where he killed his brother-in-law, H. H. Brunz, 25 years ago, and was sentenced to the penitentiary for life, was pardoned today by Gov. McCreary.

Koors created a sensation last July by appearing before Warden Wells and asking that he be locked up in the penitentiary, explaining that he was an escaped convict.

Broken in health and spirit, tired of eluding ever present officials, anxious once more to assume his right name, Koors, known as Geo. Bruegen in New York, decided to give up his freedom to ease his conscience. As a reward for his sacrifice he has gained a pardon.

Warden Wells was so surprised when Koors presented himself for incarceration that he took him to be an insane man. Looking up the records he found that Koors escaped while employed as a trusty in the warehouse of the furniture company, which then had a contract on the prison labor.

Koors, after his escape, went to Bellepont, in this city, where he caught a freight train for Louisville.

From Louisville Koors wandered through Ind., after he had permitted his beard to grow, and then went to California, where he worked for several years. Later he went to South American nations and finally to New York. He said he read one day while in the prison that his sister, Mrs. Burns, had struck a man in the face with an umbrella during a quarrel in Covington. Up to that time he had not planned for escape from prison.

His mother advised him that he ought to take his punishment for the crime he had committed. Feeling that he was spending his time in prison for a punishment because of his sister, when he says he did not think worthy of it, he made his escape. Arriving at New York, he tried to reform fallen women.

A few days before he returned to Kentucky the house in which he was living in New York was raided. He thought the raid was to capture him, and when he escaped he went to the river intending to kill himself. The thought came to him as he arrived at the river that he should trust to luck whether he should die or return to Kentucky.

Tossing a coin, it fell to his lot to return to the prison, and without hesitation he pawned enough of his effects to purchase a ticket to this city.

The Governor of Minnsota has issued a proclamation appointing a week to be known as Seed Corn week during which a campaign will be made for the careful selection of seed corn. Every corn grower in that state is urged on at least one day of the week to make it his especial duty to go through his corn field and select for seed the best ears from the sturdiest stalks, selecting and storing them after the plan outlined by the State Experiment Station.

I will sell a young, black mare to Burlington next Monday. B. B. [illegible]

Grasselli LIME SULPHUR SOLUTION

ORCHARD INSURANCE
Against Scale Insects.

Spray in the Fall—(after leaves have fallen) with GRASSELLI LIME-SULPHUR SOLUTION

For the Following Reasons:

First—The ground is in better condition for moving spray machinery, as it is often soft and mushy in the spring.

Second—The scale insects are more susceptible to the Lime-Sulphur Solution in the fall, as the waxy covering is soft. This covering hardens during the winter months.

Third—There is not so much work crowding at this time as in the spring.

Local Happenings.

Turnips are doing nicely.

Next Monday is county court day.

Watermelons are delicacies of the past.

A killing frost is due at most any time.

Pawpaws are ripe and possums are getting fat.

Dr. Yelton received his automobile last Friday.

With this issue the Recorder begins its thirty-ninth year.

Some tobacco was standing in the patch at the beginning of this week.

On every page in this paper you will find something of interest to you.

L. A. Conner has paid as high as 15 cents for a few crops of tobacco.

Samuel Petitt sold his tobacco at 18 cents a pound, John Gilligan, buyer.

There has been a wonderful improvement in the pastures the past week.

The Hebron ball club will play the Cincys at Hebron next Saturday afternoon.

There is a growing sentiment in Kentucky in favor of State aid for public roads.

A nice, bright fall would be about right following so much gloomy weather.

There are not hogs enough in this county to furnish its meat supply for another year.

County Clerk Rogers sold three two year old steers last week for the neat little sum of $264.

Charles Shinkle, of Plattsburg neighborhood, was a business visitor to Burlington last Monday.

A very large per cent of the 1913 crop of corn in this county has been put in the shock.

Covington is now in the midst of Fashion Week, and the Covingtonians are having a gala time.

According to the Recorder's weather chart there will be considerable nice weather in October.

The light showers the past week have been of great benefit to grass which is growing nicely.

Base ball scores will now disappear from the daily papers very much to the sorrow of the fans.

Jailer Samuel Adams sold his horse, buggy and harness to Fitch Bros., of Lawrenceburg, one day last week.

The foot ball season is on in full force again and the surgeons are providing an increased supply of bandages, &c.

Indications are that the high price which the 1913 crop of tobacco will bring will compensate liberally for the deficit in pounds.

John Rogers, of Belleview, passed through Burlington, last Friday enroute to Erlanger to visit his brother, Atty. O. M. Rogers.

In this issue appears the Sheriff's proclamation ordering a vote taken on the good roads proposition at the next regular election.

Automobiles will have a rough time for a while after the new metal that is being prepared is put on the Burlington and Florence pike.

Rev. Campbell assisted by Rev. Coakley, of Cynthiana, Harrison county, began a protracted meeting at the local Baptist church last Monday night.

The first wedding to be solemnized in the new church building at Pt. Pleasant was that of Mr. Geo. W. Kolmyer and Miss Virgie Lee Riggs, last Thesday.

It seems that the fowl crop is the only one in Kentucky not damaged by the drouth, all varieties having flourished during the summer season.

Last week the Recorder said D. M. Snyder would erect a monument in Hebron cemetery for the P[illegible]am heirs when it should have said for James Popham.

Some of the farmers who cut their corn were pleased to find it of a much better quality than they anticipated, the ears being larger and better matured.

Wilson & Stephens, the East Bend dealers in livestock, passed thru Burlington one day the past week with a drove of cattle enroute to the Cincinnati market.

Herbert Kirkpatrick finds nothing now in the daily papers more interesting than the quotations of the price of junk. The base ball season is over and the fur season has not opened.

A new steamboat line between Cincinnati and Carlo, Ill., is being advocated. If put in operation the proposed line will connect boats running between Cincinnati and Pittsburg.

The good roads campaign was launched at Walton last Saturday night by an enthusiastic meeting at the opera house, a full account of which appears in the Walton department.

J. J. Duncan is preparing to build a large stock barn to shelter his stock in winter, and at the same time fill with water a system of large cisterns to provide stock water in dry seasons.

Mrs. Elizabeth Winston will have a postcard shower on Sunday, October 12th, that being her 73d birthday. All postals should be addressed to her at Ghent, Carroll county, this State, in care of Walton O'Neal.

The sum of $780 was recently paid for an autographed letter of Martha Washington's. Martha Washington, as a young lady, wrote a very fair hand, but her spelling, like that of her distinguished husband, George, was really of a very peculiar character.

The publishers of the Cincinnati Times-Star have announced that after Oct. 1, 1913, the price to subscribers receiving that paper by mail will be $2.50 per year instead of $2.00 per year as heretofore. In accordance with this advance the combination rate of the Recorder and Times-Star will be $3.50 instead of $3.

H. Schanker, of the firm of H. Schanker & Son, of Erlanger, was in Burlington one day last week scattering advertising matter. He asked for a neighborhood in which the Recorder does not circulate and when told that neighborhood was not in Boone county, he said he would not have any more circulars printed to scatter over this territory.

Master Milton Revill, son of Rankin Revill, who spent the summer here with his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Revill, was badly hurt in Frankfort, one day last week when his bicycle skidded with him and threw him down a steep embankment in the school house yard. He received a scalp wound that required ten stitches to close. He was thrown into a pile of cinders and his scalp cut by a piece of sewer pipe. To cleanse and dress the wound required two physicians two hours. He took no anesthetic and never flinched during the ordeal.

In renewing subscription to the Recorder, Mrs. John D. Baldon, of New Castle, Colorado, writes: "I send you one dollar and a half for another year's subscription to the Recorder. We are well and having a good rain. I wish some of it would go there, where it is needed. Kenneth has returned from a trip to Trappers Lake, the head waters of White River. Caught a lot of fine trout, and got some nice grouse also. No open season on deer this year. I send my regards to friends there and I surely do appreciate the dear old Recorder, and thank you for not stopping it when our time expired."

Benj. Betz, 50, whose home is on Elm street, Ludlow, while attempting to board a Queen and Crescent freight train at Erlanger at six o'clock last Sunday evening, was thrown under the wheels and both legs were so badly crushed below the knees that amputation was necessary. In company of James Gardner, also of Ludlow, Betz went mushroom-hunting near Erlanger, and missing the passenger train, attempted to ride to Ludlow on the freight train. Gardner was on the train and Betz missed his footing on account of having the basket of mushrooms on his arm. He was taken to Gest and McLean streets on an engine and removed to the Good Samaritan Hospital where he died several hours after.

Confirmation Services.

Next Thursday, October 9th, a large class of children of St. Patrick's church, Verona, will be confirmed at St. Joseph's church, in Warsaw. All should be there at 10 a. m. The girls will have white veils. A procession will start from the parsonage to the church The Rt. Rev. Bishop maes will confirm.

BASE BALL.

Belleview 3; Petersburg 2.

Belleview came across last Saturday at Petersburg with its second out of three games played with the Petersburg team. The contest went ten innings. The batteries were Sandford and Clore for Belleview and Fromholtz and Aylor for Petersburg. Sandford held Petersburg to three hits while Belleview made seven off of Fromholtz. Clore caught a great game.

Erlanger 6; Elsmere 3.

Erlanger won its two games out of three with Elsmere, ending the championship series. Maxwell, who was in the box for Elsmere pitched a fine game but was given very poor support. Elsmere's three runs were made off of Carter, who was succeeded by Hamilton, who held Elsmere hitless and runless for five innings. The final contest was a very exciting affair.

ILLUSTRATED LECTURES.

On Wednesday evening, Oct. 8, at Hebron, Prof. E. L. Dix will begin a series of lectures under the auspices of the Good Roads Committee. The lectures will be educational, illustrated by stereopticon pictures. Good and bad roads in Boone county will be shown on thescreen besides illuminating information on the subject in general. Other dates will be announced next week.

But the notification committee meet meets with a rebuff.

GOOD EATERS AS GOOD WIVES

Help Us More Than a Grain of Truth in Statement Advanced for the Assertion Made.

"Marry a woman who is fond of her meals. If you wish to be a happy husband see that she shows discrimination and anxious care in the choice of food and drink for herself.

"Never marry a woman who will have high tea when you are not at home to dinner. The same remark applies to the woman who looks on a dinner properly selected and carefully set up with the fitting accompaniment of glittering glass and spotless cutlery as merely a pandering to the brutal instincts of man."

This was told by an expert who has studied the question.

"If mothers would only teach their daughters," he added, "to enjoy their food and make it a joy for the husband, there would be fewer disastrous marriages.

"The majority of women toy with their food and do not understand the enjoyment that a large meal well prepared and properly set out gives to a healthy man. How often does a wife profess a quiet disgust for her husband who insists on having good meals.

"I know a man whose wife will only occasionally eat a good meal with him. As a consequence, he very rarely dines at home.

"Quarrels are often the result, but the wife does not for a moment believe the cause of these is her inability to eat well in sympathy with her husband.

"Country girls generally make better wives than town girls, simply because they are good eaters.

"The average man feels miserable at a good dinner with nobody to eat with him."

SEE USEFULNESS OF CAMEL

Importation of Animal Into This Country May Be Productive of a Great Deal of Good.

News comes from the insiders that the camel is to be imported into this country and domesticated and increased so that he may vie with the useful cow. The camel used to live on this continent several aeons ago. He was driven across Behring strait by the ice. It is hoped that he may take up the threads of life where he left off. The camel is extremely useful. He can subsist without high feed or ice water. Camel's milk makes excellent cheese, and shawls made from camel's hair are a splendid covering for old gentlemen. As a means of exercise the camel is not to be despised.

Perhaps, however, the best use of the camel will be as an example to our rich men. Most of them are likely to forget how difficult it is for a camel to go through the eye of the needle. But when camels begin to mingle with our scenery advertisements and are seen occasionally walking up and down Fifth avenue and Pennsylvania avenue, who knows but that these humble instruments of providence may serve as object lessons and thus be useful in other ways than to satisfy merely material cravings.—Life.

"Pam's" Little Joke.

Doctor Butler, the master of Trinity, who was entertained by the Harrow association recently, told an interesting story of Palmerston. He remembered, he said, one speech day when Palmerston went. It rained the whole day. Palmerston galloped down from the Cambridge house. He came and sat for two hours in his wet clothes listening to the speeches. He went out at the end not a bit abashed in spirit, and stood with the governors and a number of the boys, and began to speak.

"Doctor Butler." He was corrected, and told it was "Mr." Butler. "I beg pardon," he said, "Mr. Butler. No man should be doctored against his will."

Another story was to illustrate the fact that sometimes logic was overcome by personal feeling. He remembered many years ago meeting a little boy riding on his pony. He said to him:

"I suppose you always wish the best side to win. I believe we are going to play Eton. Do you wish them to win?"

"No, certainly not," was the answer.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Gold and Silver Coinage.

Gold and silver coins were authorized at the same time by an act of congress in 1792, but copper coins, cents and half cents, were issued before either gold or silver. The coinage of copper cents and half cents began in 1793, of silver coins in 1794 and gold in 1795. The first gold coins issued were the eagle, or ten-dollar piece, and half and quarter eagles. The double eagle, twenty-dollar gold piece, was not issued till 1849, and the only piece of that year known to be in existence is in the mint at Philadelphia. From 1849 to 1881 not a single twenty-dollar gold piece was coined, but since 1881 the coinage has been continuous.

Not a Biography.

During a lull in the dinner conversation the hostess turned to the famous traveler and author, who was the guest of the occasion, and said:

"I suppose reading your book so many times has made you thoroughly familiar with Africa, Mr. ——. Now, honestly, did you ever see a wild animal in all those wanderings?"

"Often, often, many times done in the days I do not like to stay home.

For You and Your Wife

A cheerful, pretty bedroom will help you to start your day in a cheerful, pleasant mood. Its a haven of rest for you to come back to at night. And all day long its a pleasure to your wife.

To make a pretty bedroom it is more important to have tasteful furniture that harmonizes, than furniture that merely costs a lot. A brass bed, or a pretty iron bed if you prefer, dresser and chiffonier, a low rocking chair and one or two straight back chairs to match, a shirtwaist box, light colored rug on the floor,—all this does not cost very much, IF YOU BUY FROM US, and makes a truly pretty room. Come in and talk it over.

Don't forget to get a STEARNS & FOSTER mattress. That is what makes your bedroom a haven of rest. No other mattress is so comfortable.

Made in all grades of superiority; $9.00 upward. Windsor Grade at $13.50 is guaranteed SUPERIOR TO ANY OTHER ADVERTISED MATTRESS. We sell it on 60 nights trial. If you CAN part with it at the end of that time we will return your money without question or comment.

Too Much Outgo.

It is a lamentable fact that the people of Kentucky spend millions of dollars every year for food supplies and other things which could be produced at home. The Somerset Herald says about $2,000,000 worth of food supplies were shipped into Pulaski county and "these supplies consisted of such stuff as could have been grown at home." While the people of the county were paying out all this money for products from elsewhere "nearly two-thirds of the land that ought to be worth $150 per acre was entirely without cultivation."

Somerset is a good sized town and is the center of a very considerable trade, but there are no factories despite the fact there is "plenty of coal and timber and fair means of transportation." The Herald makes the sensible suggestion that canning factories and packing houses would make a market for farm products and "there would be no excuse for two-thirds of the land being uncultivated." The equally sensible recommendation is offered that a commercial body should organize to look after these matters.

A number of Kentucky towns and cities are poorly supplied with manufacturing enterprises. Industries of this kind encourage agricultural development and tend to reduce the number of idle acres. There is not much reason why the Kentuckians should pay out enormous amounts every year for food products. The right kind of farming would keep much of this money at home. Pulaski county evidently needs progressive farmers quite as badly as Somerset needs factories.—C.-J.

Beauty and Politics.

The Chicago Heral-Record relates at some length the particulars of the latest move of the Chicago suffragists, and illustrates its story with certain exhibits that fail to carry conviction.

It appears that the Woman's party in Cook county has dropped for the moment its ambitious program of educating Chicago women upon the responsibilities of the organization who will act as "chief marshal" of the beauty squad, announces that "to qualify the candidates must have youth, beauty, brains, tact and convincing manner. They must not be over twenty-two years old. Their duties will be to perform the more delicate feats of statesmanship during the inauguration of women's politics in Chicago. They will handle all situations where delicacy and feminine charm are apt to prove more useful than forceful methods."

This is an interesting program and the qualifications are clearly defined. Unfortunately for the general effect, the Chicago newspaper publishes a group picture of some of the most promising candidates for places upon the beauty squad. We will not be so impolite as to deny the ladies whose photographs represented beauty for after all it is only Chicago beauty that represents beauty, but the picture make plain that the qualifications given are not being lived up to. These ladies may be beautiful and tactful and brainy, but unless their pictures do them serious injustice, most of them will never see forty-two again, instead of twenty-two, fixed as a dead line.—Evening Post.

Make Farming a Study.

The marketing of farm produce has become as vital as that of production. It is quite as dissouraging to be compelled to sell a crop on a low market after all work required to produce it has been completed as it is to see the crop failing in the field as a result of a poor season. Good management is as necessary at planting time, and when one link in the chain is neglected there will be a reduction in the profits. All of the steps should be regarded as important, and skill and business methods are necessary to bring greatest success.

From the earliest process for production the crop up to the harvesting and selling every possible device and means for reducing cost should be employed. Seed be tested, plowing and planting done with the most improved and efficient machinery and the crop must be well fed and tended to bring it on rapidly to an abundant yield. After harvest it is a question to know just when the crop should be sold, or if stock is being raised good judgment is required to determine when the sale should be made. These questions all require a great deal of study and experience. The farmer who investigates the principles underlying his business, as does the proprietor of a factory, will be the one who can best answer them and succeed in producing as well as marketing his products.

Hickman county should show the same public spirit that Graves is showing in the matter of road improvement. Too many men seem to be afraid they will do some public service for nothing, excusing themselves upon the plea that they pay taxes and taxes are high. The roads are the property of all the people and good roads contribute to the general prosperity and convenience and happiness of the people. Our roads are in fairly good condition as a rule with here and there narrow stretches that cannot be helped much unless some of the abutting lands are donated or bought and thrown into the road. But in dry weather nearly all roads are good, and we are disposed to wait until they get bad before we fix them. The truth is, it takes very little rainfall to reduce our good roads to bad ones. Lack of proper drainage is one of the prime causes for bad roads and some of our roads are so level or so hemmed in that the water cannot find an outlet, so it just stays in the gullies or sunken places, and a mud hole is easily made, a bottomless mud hole when winter's rains and freezes come. In driving over the county we have noticed many places which can now be fixed in a few hours, that in the wet season will be axle-deep, as they have usually been in the wet seasons of the past. Certainly now is the time to apply the remedy.—Clinton Gazette.

Election Notice.

BOONE COUNTY COURT.
Regular Term, 1 day September, 1913
M. J. Crouch and others on petition.

It appearing that at the last regular term of this Court, held August 4th, 1913, M. J. Crouch and five hundred and thirty-four (534) others filed their petition herein asking that a vote be taken upon the proposition to have free turnpikes and gravel roads in Boone County; and it further appearing upon proof heard in open Court, that said petition is signed by a number of legal voters in this county equal to fifteen (15) per cent of the total vote cast in this county at the last preceding general election held in Boone County for the year 1912, and no exceptions, protests or objections having been made, taken or filed herein against said petition, it is now ordered and directed that B. B. Hume, Sheriff, cause a poll to be opened in each and all of the regular voting precincts in Boone County, at the next regular County Election to be held on November 4th, 1913, to take the sense of the qualified voters of Boone Co. upon the proposition to have free turnpikes and gravel roads in said county. Said election will be held by the same officers that hold said regular November Election for said year 1913, and in all respects in accordance with the provisions of the general election laws of this State; and the question "Are you in favor of free turnpikes and gravel roads" shall be printed on the ballots, as provided by section 1459 Kentucky Statutes; and the Clerk of this Court will cause said question to be printed on the official ballots for said general election.

Said Sheriff will cause this order to be published in the Boone County Recorder, a weekly newspaper published in this county for at least thirty days prior to said election; and he will also advertise said election by written hand-bills, posted in at least four conspicuous places in each voting precinct in this county for the same length of time.

The Clerk of this court will, within five (5) days after the entry of this order, certify same to B. B. Hume, a sheriff of Boone Co. Kentucky.

State of Kentucky
County of Boone

I, W. R. Rogers Clerk of the County Court in and for the County aforesaid, do certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of an order made this day in the Boone County Court in the matter of Election of Free Turnpikes &c., as appears of record in my office.

Given under my hand this 1st day of September 1913.

W. R ROGERS, Clerk.

Notice is hereby given that pursuant to the above order an election will be held at the time, places and for the purpose mentioned in said order.

Witness my hand this the 2d day of September 1913.

B. B. HUME, Sheriff
Boone County Kentucky.

What Girl Should Learn.

A girl who cannot cook the food she eats, who cannot make even her simplest garments, who cannot wash and iron them, and who does not know anything about what to do in a sick room should not consider herself marriageable. She is cheating the man she marries and laying up heartaches for herself.

God intended women to be homemakers and we are robbing the girls when we do not provide suitable training for their life work.

Give the girl a literary education and add accomplishments if you like. But should these be allowed to crowd out the really necessary training for her life work?

Domestic science can be made as interesting and attractive to girls as the practical studies and shop work are to boys in their schools. Why is not the science of breadmaking as interesting to a girl as memorizing the distance of the heavenly bodies from the sun? Would not the members of her family enjoy eating one of her fragrant loaves as much as they would seeing her "do a sum" in algebra?

Would she be any less a "lady" because she knew how to take an ill child's temperature?—Ex.

Money talks, but it always talks loudest when it is given to charity.

GROWING TRUCK CROPS

Three Acres Devoted to Sash Gardening Is Profitable.

Great Care Should Be Exercised in Gathering, Packing and Marketing of Vegetables in Order to Secure Fancy Prices.

(By W. R. BEATTIE.)

In certain localities where the climate is mild, such crops as parsley, lettuce, radishes and beets can be grown during the winter months if provision is made for protecting the plants during the few periods of freezing weather. The cheapest form of covering is cotton cloth or unbleanched muslin. In other localities, where the climate is too severe for growing crops under cloth protection, cheap sash filled with glass are effective. Cheap hotbeds, constructed in long lines with plank sides, may be profitably employed for forcing vegetables for the market in the neighborhood of large cities, where an abundance of manure for heating material may be obtained.

Take, for instance, parsley. This is sometimes grown as an all-year crop, or it is grown during the autumn and winter and the land devoted to lettuce or cucumbers during the spring.

The parsley seed is sown in August or September and the seedlings transplanted to the frames as soon as they are large enough to be handled. Cutting of the leaves begins in the autumn and continues throughout the winter, and often until quite late in the spring, provided prices remain good.

Crops grown in frames are usually superior in quality and appearance to those grown in the open and should be given more care in handling and marketing. The cost of production is somewhat higher than for outdoor crops, and it is essential that they be out up in neat packages in order to bring the highest market price. The more successful growers give the work of gathering, grading and packing the crop their closest personal attention and use only clean, attractive packages for handling and shipping.

Parsley is shipped in one-bushel crates, half-barrel hampers, and in four-bushel barrels. Sugar barrels are sometimes used. When making shipments in the large barrels it is customary to place a block of ice in the top of each barrel. The barrel is then covered with a piece of burlap.

Radishes and beets are tied in bundles and shipped in hamper baskets or in the veneer barrels so commonly used for handling spinach and kale.

Lettuce is usually shipped in the tapering half-barrel hamper with a wooden cover, or sometimes in crates. The lettuce is not washed, but is packed as it is cut from the beds and hauled direct to the shipping point, where it is loaded into refrigerator cars or sent by express.

Cucumbers are generally picked early in the morning, while they are fresh and crisp. In removing cucumbers from the vine a sharp knife or pair of shears should be used to cut the stems. The cucumbers are washed by floating them for a minute or two in a tank of clear cold water and are then placed upon a rack or screen before packing. As a rule the box or crate in which the cucumbers are packed, is lined with white paper, and when filled the top is partly covered with slats, leaving the cucumbers partly exposed.

Egg plants are usually wrapped separately in thin paper or inclosed in a paper bag before packing. Snap beans are shipped in the regular five-eighths barrel and half-barrel hamper baskets, such as are used for handling the general field crop. Peppers are generally wrapped in tissue paper and packed in wooden pans, such as are used for marketing early tomatoes.

Care of Manure Spreader.

Nothing in the operation of any machine is as important as the lubrication; and the manure spreader is no exception to this rule, says Dairy Farmer. It should be oiled frequently. When you first start using a new spreader, you should go over it carefully, oiling all moving parts.

Then watch the machine closely for a while, and you will soon learn that parts must be oiled several times in a day's work. Give the machine the right kind of a start and it will save dollars for you in needless repair bills. Get into the habit of oiling it regularly as needed. Don't think that it does not need oil when it is covered with manure. It may not be a nice job at times, but it pays in the end.

Secure Best Fruit.

To secure the very best trees it is best to renew the stock only every other year.

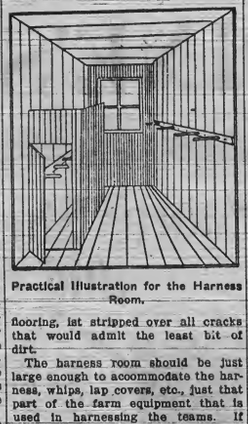
PLAN FOR BEAUTY AT HOME

Celastrus, or Bitter Sweet Vine, Is One of Most Satisfactory That Can Be Grown.

(By L. M. BENNINGTON.)

The beauty which is near at hand is often neglected while we prize that which is denied us—we refer to the beauty and desirability of the Celastrus, or bitter sweet vine. This native climber found in our woods and along fences, is one of the most satisfactory vines that can be grown about the home. It is as hardy as granite, a quick grower, twining securely about its support and it is not liable to disease. In the fall, when flowers are scarce, it covers itself with clusters of orange-colored fruit, which the frost opens, revealing its crimson seeds.

Choose a dark, rainy day, if possible, for the transplanting, otherwise do this work at sunset—we mean in transplanting seedlings. Water the seed bed thoroughly a short time before you begin to transplant; then lift the plants, with all the soil their roots will hold, and remove to the permanent bed.



Keep the seedlings covered with a wet cloth, so that the heat and wind will not dry them. With a sharp pointed stick make the hole for the plant and then fill it with water. Plant the seedling in this puddle, drawing the dark soil about the stalk when the ground has been firmed about the plant as much as possible.

A miniature water garden is practical, and will prove most interesting, needing less attention than a flower bed its size. Have a sugar or vinegar barrel cut in two, or use a wooden tub. Sink this in the soil. Make a potting box about twelve inches square and fill with rich mud from a pond, or use half rich loam, adding to the mud or loam about one-third of well-rotted manure. Plant the nymphaeroot in this and place in the tub; fill with water until it is two or three inches deep over the root. When the growth commences and the leaves appear, water may be added from time to time until the tub is full. Never change the water, simply replace that which evaporates.

HARNESS ROOM ON THE FARM

Illustration Shows Apartment for Accommodation of Light Paraphernalia, Robes and Curtains.

There is no other part of the farm equipment, that requires closer attention than that of the harness, both the heavy-weight harness and the light-driving harness. The harness room should be conveniently located in the barn, and should be made as close and dust proof as possible to make it. However, there will be considerable dust and dirt accumulate, despite the efforts to keep it out. In the drawing we see an apartment made especially for the light harness, lap covers and storm curtains, etc., which should never be permitted to lay raound, on the benches or barrels in the barn as we sometimes see them. This closet or cabinet for the light harness, is made of matched flooring, is stripped over all cracks flooring, ist stripped over all cracks that would admit the least bit of dirt.

The harness room should be just large enough to accommodate the harness, whips, lap covers, etc., just that part of the farm equipment that is used in harnessing the teams. If made larger, there will be an accumulation of a variety of things, such as empty kegs, barrels, boxes and other things too numerous to mention.

Having a good room for the harness is not all in caring for the harness. It should be washed and oiled regularly, Care of Colt's Feet.

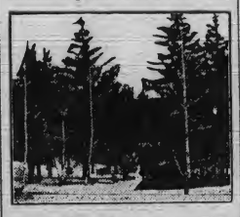
Every colt owner should possess a foot rasp. Never mind about a knife; the less the knife is used around the foot the better. The first time the smith—if of the ordinary kind—gets at the foot he will probably cut it enough to last a lifetime. If the colt has been handled and quieted before it is weaned, it will allow the foot to be raised and leveled with the rasp. Study the columns of bones that go into the foot. "No foot, no horse," will seldom apply to the colt whose owner keeps the foot level.

Measles.

Measles is very common with small pigs. Since it is a contagion it spreads very rapidly when once there is an outbreak in the herd. Some of its more common symptoms are coughing and sneezing. The eyes are red and watery and there is generally a discharge from the nose. The appetite is generally impaired and there is a desire to remain in the nest or bed.

SPRAY IS NECESSARY

Many Troubles Which Contest Fruit Grower's Success.



No Other Insect Has Caused So Much Legislation as San Jose Scale—Spread Rapidly in East Despite Precautions.

(By J. G. SANDERS.)

Past and gone are those days when large crops of perfect fruit, uninjured by curculio codling moth or scab, could be harvested without thought of sprays and spray pumps, of lime-sulfur and bordeaux mixture, and of other treatments for the troubles which contest the modern fruit grower's success.

In the early days young orchards required but little care after planting other than occasional cultivation, until in due time the perfect unblemished fruit was gathered. A gradual change has taken place with the introduction and dissemination of new insect pests and plant diseases, until now spray apparatus and materials are absolutely necessary.

These changing conditions have taught us a strong lesson of the possibility of even more disastrous introductions of pests. There are still many serious pests in foreign lands which have not become established in our country, but doubtless will be sooner or later if systems of rigid inspection of imported plant material are not soon inaugurated.

The awakening of the entomologists and the public in general to the danger of introducing serious insect pests and fungus diseases, was caused more largely by the introduction of hte San Jose scale than any other one factor. No other insect has caused so much state and national legislation as the San Jose scale (a harmless insect in its native country in central China), which infests a wide range of fruit trees as well as many ornamentals. The damage caused by this tiny insect was early recognized by entomologists and means were sought to prevent its spread. But before adequate means of control were discovered, it had gained a foot-hold in many sections of some of our eastern states, and in spite of all precautions has gradually spread.

What is true of fruit trees is also true of shade trees. Take, for instance, the injury to our beautiful birch trees by insects. Such a general destruction of birch trees in ornamental plantings has occurred in the past four or five years throughout some sections, that the attention of a great many people has been attracted to the loss.

The small white larva of the bronze birch-borer burrows just beneath the bark, eating its way irregularly around the trunk and limbs of the tree in the sap-bearing layers, leaving winding galleries of castings and cutting off the flow of sap beyond the point attacked. On the younger branches these winding galleries are revealed by the corresponding ridges on the exterior of the limb.

Work of Brown Birch-Borers.—1. Infested limb showing raised ridges. 2. Bark removed to show galleries of boring larvae. 3. Larva hibernating in a cell bored in the solid wood.

No adequate remedy has been found to combat this pest. It is always advisable to cut out and burn all infested limbs very early each year before the adults emerge.

Until this serious infestation passes over, it is not advisable to plant any birches, for loss of the tree is almost sure to result.

Improving Hog Industry.

When farmers realize the possibilities of exclusive pork growing as a specialized branch of the animal industry, and evolve systems of farm management adapted to the business, it will become attractive to business farmers, and herds of well-bred hogs will become common in many localities where few good hogs are now seen.

Recognize Poor Fences.

If you put hogs in yards where the fences are poor, don't be surprised if you have a job chasing them three or four times a day. If they get a notion of getting out, it is hard work to break them of it.

C. Presley Adams, formerly steward of the Grand Hotel, Cincinnati has purchased the Central Ave. restaurant in that city, and with his brother Hilton Adams will conduct the business. The restaurant is near the Grand Central Depot, and they would be pleased to meet their Boone Co. friends at any time.

A thief entered the residence of Mrs. Laura Gaines last Thursday night while she was absent visiting a neighbor and stole $20 which she had carelessly laid upon the dresser. The supposition is that the theft was committed by local talent as it was evident they were watching an opportunity of this kind.

The electric block system gang on the L. & N. Railway have been here for the past three weeks. The system has been installed at the pike crossing, though it will be a couple of months before the entire system is completed. It is said to be the latest and most effective system in use and almost an impossibility for trainmen to have a wreck if they notice the signals.

Rev. J. J. Nugent, the new pastor of the Walton M. E. church arrived here Saturday and preached his introductory sermon Sunday morning, and also in the evening to good sized congregations. Rev. Nugent was formerly stationed at Newcastle, and has many friends here who are glad to welcome him back. Rev. and Mrs. Nugent will make their home with Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Norman for the present.

There will be a Circle Meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society October 10th and 11th at the Methodist church. Conference officers and other prominent people from a distance will be present.

A. L. Mallet, of the Union creamery, won 2nd premium on his butter at the Kentucky State Fair, with an excellent score of 95 1-2, his competitor for the first premium beating him only one-half point. Mr. Mallett won first premium at the State Dairy Show at Lexington in Jan., scoring 95.75, and first at the State Fair last year.

Clifford Sanders, formerly of Walton, who is employed by the Pullman Palace Car Co., and located at Ludlow, left last week on an extended vacation trip thru the eastern states this week, visiting New York, Boston, Washington, D. C., etc., and Canadian points of interest. He has a leave of absence of about a month. He goes at the expense of the Pullman Co., for faithful service. He has been in the employ of this company for about fifteen years. He is in charge of the store room of this company and stands high in the estimation of the officials under whom he is employed.

The protracted meeting at the Walton Baptist church closed last Friday after a two weeks session, in which there was a large attendance and most interesting services. Rev. O. M. Fuery, of Crescent Hill, Louisville, did the preaching and the pastor, Rev. H. C. Wayman assisted in the exercises. There were eleven additions. By letter—Jas. B. Allen, Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Callender, Mrs. Parthenia Menefee, Mrs. Laura Gaines. By Conversion—Mrs. W. Carpenter, Marion Johnson, Marie Callender, Fred Callender, Wilbur Rice, Bryan Beverley. The baptismal rites were performed by Rev. Wayman at the mill pond Friday afternoon.

The Good Roads campaign was opened at the Walton opera house last Saturday night with a large number of persons present. D. B. Wallace was selected as chairman of the meeting in the absence of Dr. M. J. Crouch, constituted chairman. Addresses were made by Judge J. G. Tomlin, Hons. Edgar C. Riley, John L. Vest, Chas. Strother and Jas. W. Kennedy, all advocating good roads and free turnpikes, showing that the cost would be comparatively small and the advantages infinitely great, besides the increase of the valuation of real estate would add to the taxable values so as to make the general cost trifling to the advantages gained. At the conclusion of the meeting a vote was taken on the question of better highways and free turnpikes, and it proved to be unanimous, not a dissenting vote being given.

On Wednesday of last week a young couple arrived here on the L. & N. Railway. They gave their names as John O'Hara and Miss Duval, Greenup Street, Covington, and stated they desired to be married. They made their desires known to Ralph Edwards, who informed them that County Clerk W. R. Rogers was then in Walton. Mr. Rogers refused their request on account of their youth. They engaged Mr. Edwards to take them in his auto to Independence, the county seat of Kenton county. But "papa" Duval had forestalled them there, having phoned the clerk there to refuse them a license. They then left in the car for Covington in the hopes of securing the necessary document. Just as the party started on the road they met another automobile coming in the opposite direction. "Oh, there's papa," exclaimed the young lady, and Mr. Edwards was urged to "speed up" and get out of the danger zone. Now Ralph is young himself, and his sympathies being with the young people did their bidding and "papa" was soon lost in a cloud of dust. They went to Cincinnati and it is believed afterward secured a license in Newport, where they were married and fell into each other's arms in ecstacies of bliss to await parential forgiveness from stern and obstinate "papa."

Last Friday three young men passed through Walton on a "hike" from ocean to ocean. They gave their names as Sergeant Karl Rittmann, formerly of the Eighth Company Rhode Island Artillery Corps, U. S. A.; Chas. Flanders, Albany, N. Y., and Louis A. Mohr, Ex-Sergeant 109 Company, Coast Artillery Corps, U. S. A. Their starting point was Newport, Rhode Island, June 15. They wear the regulation army equipment of the American Soldiers, weighing 35 pounds, consisting of poncos, blankets, tents, cooking utensils, compass, Colts 45 cal. automatic revolvers. They carry letters from the Governors of Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, Ohio and Pennsylvania, and were on their way to Frankfort to get the signature of Gov. James B. McCreary. From there they go to Louisville, Mammoth Cave, Bowling Green, Henderson, through southern Indiana and Illinois to St. Louis, Missouri, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, crossing the Majave Desert, Sacramento Valley to San Diego, Los Angeles, to San Francisco, covering a distance of 4,800 miles, and expect to be there June 15th, 1914. They had covered 1,400 miles when they reached Walton. They camp in the open when weather permits. They lecture before the Y. M. C. A. societies, reciting the duties and opportunities of a young man in the service of Uncle Sam in the army and navy. The trip is a pleasure venture and they make their living by selling postal card pictures of themselves.

The beautiful ceremonies of the laying of the corner stone of the new Baptist church at Walton took place last Saturday afternoon, and was attended by several hundred people. The day was propitious for the occasion and everything conspired to make the event a success in every particular. The weather was delightful—bright sunshine blessing the occasion, and the large number present were in thorough sympathy with the ceremonies. At the appointed hour—2:30, the Masonic fraternity, numbering nearly one hundred, marched from their hall to the building site where the exercises were begun at once with Hon. Orie S. Ware, of Covington, Deputy Grand Master, acting for the Grand Master of the State, officiating, assisted by the following:—J. G. Slater, W. M., as Deputy Grand Master; R. F. DeMoisey, M. M., as Senior Grand Warden; John L. Vest, P. M., as Junior Grand Warden; E. M. Johnson, Sec., as Grand Secretary; C. W. Ransler, P. M., as Grand Treasurer; B. K. Menefee, M. M., as Grand Architect; A. K. Johnson, P. M., as Grand Chaplain; D. B. Wallace, P. M., as Grand Marshal. The exercises were beautiful and impressive and were according to the rites and ceremonies of Ancient Craft Masonry. A copper box containing a bible, the church history, list of members, of the church, Cincinnati Times-Star, Kentucky Post, Boone County Recorder, Grant County News, Western Recorder, various coins of recent period, and other articles, were deposited in the corner stone with appropriate ceremony. At the close of the Masonic exercises splendid addresses were made by Rev. J. W. Porter, D. D., of Lexington, and Hon. J. G. Tomlin, of Walton. The exercises were interspersed with vocal sacred music. At the close a collection was taken up and quite a nice sum realized. The entire services were entertaining and instructive and heartily enjoyed by everybody.

Owen Bethel and son, of near Verona, were here on business Tuesday.

Mrs. Mollie Ford spent the week at Warsaw the guest of Mrs. John F. Donaldson.

Miss Nida Dickey, of near Union, spent the week here with her sister Mrs. J. G. Tomlin.

Born—To Mr. and Mrs. M. M. Lucas, of Banklick, a line son, Sept. 28th, Dr. B. K. Menefee attending.

Mrs. M. V. Cline, who is spending most of her time at Williamstown, where her husband is engaged in railroad construction work, spent the week here with her parents Mr. and Mrs. P. C. Youell.

TO THE PUBLIC—Notwithstanding reports, without authority, to the effect that I contemplate leaving Walton, I desire to state most emphatically, that I intend to remain here and continue in the practice of medicine until legally debarred.

TEACHERS' INSTITUTE

To Meet at Burlington Next Monday—An interesting Session Anticipated.

The Boone County Teachers' Institute will meet in its annual session at the High School building in Burlington, next Monday morning. The Institute will be called to order by County Superintendent Edgar C. Riley, after which Mrs. Cora Wilson Stewart, Superintendent of schools in Rowan county this State, will take charge of the Institute. Mrs. Stewart has a national reputation as a speaker on educational matters. She is also the originator of Moon-Light Schools which are so very popular in some quarters. Superintendent Riley is an enthusiastic school man, and assisted by Mrs. Stewart, will make the coming session of the Institute about the most noteworthy ever held in this county. Every teacher in the county and all who are interested in the advancement of educational matters should attend the session. There is no question but education is on the upward beat in Boone county and Supt. Riley is found at all times doing all in his power to advance its interests, and to do this he incurs the criticisms of some who in time to come will recognize the value of his labors.

Conditions in this county are now such that any pupil who has an ambition to secure a good, practical education can do so with but little expense and that class of pupils should receive the encouragement of the public as well as of parents. The present very favorable educational conditions that obtain in this county have existed only a few years, and the parents in many instances are not aware, seemingly, of the opportunities of which their children can take advantage at a nominal cost, and by attending the Institute next week there is no doubt but you will obtain information along local educational lines that will be a pleasure to you.

Boone county has made rapid strides in the last few years in the improvement of educational facilities for her children and every true patriot rejoices in that fact.

HERE IS THE CELEBRATED
PANAMA RANGE! $24.75
Handsomer and Better This Year ----
MADE IN CINCINNATI.

Panama Range

Has been pronounced by many to be equivalent to other ranges which they used, which cost a great deal more, and we claim that no better range has ever been offered at this price. It is well known for its splendid cooking, baking and fuel-saving qualities.

The body of the PANAMA is made of heavy blue steel, securely riveted and braced and re-enforced with heavy metal plates. The castings are heavy and are made in sections. The bottom grate is the new duplex style, which can be adjusted for coal and wood burning.

Besides its excellent qualities, the PANAMA is a beauty in appearance. We deliver the PANAMA, set up, for..... $24.75

Moore's Stoves Save and Satisfy

One reason why you should have Moore's Stoves is the unequalled satisfaction they give. But—a better reason—and one you can't afford to overlook—is the big saving of fuel Moore's Stoves mean to you.

Moore's Air-Tight Heater

Cuts down your present fuel bills fully a half. Gets all the value out of the coal—nothing goes to waste. Moore's Everlasting Firepot burns the gas, the smoke, the soot—converts them into heat instead of letting them vanish up the chimney. Use any fuel you like—best hard coal or cheapest slack—all work equally well in Moore's Air-Tight Heater. The Moore's Dust Flue and Air-Tight Draft Control are two other big features that put Moore's Stoves in a class by themselves. When will you call?

Moore's Range With the Glass Oven Door. Will also interest you. One glance will make you want it. Steel or cast—in all sizes—prices to fit your purse.

GOOD ROADS QUESTION

Where Will The Money Come From to Build The Roads and Free The Pikes?

Are you in favor of free turnpikes and gravel roads?

At our next election the voters of the county will be called upon to declare their sense upon the good roads proposition under the above question. Many people of the county believe that if this proposition carries it will be mandatory upon the Fiscal Court to purchase all of the pikes in our county. In that belief many will vote against the proposition thinking that all pikes will be freed and no money left to build new roads.

There are certain facts to be reckoned with concerning roads in this county. In the first place should this question prevail we then have passed only an enabling act. We shall by this act give our Fiscal Court power to levy a road tax not to exceed 40 cents on the hundred dollars and also power to construct new roads or purchase pikes, but this levy together with the poll tax will only amount to $30,000 per year. It will not be possible with this amount of money to maintain over 300 miles of roads and purchase over 100 miles of toll roads, but it will be possible for our Fiscal Court, and this could be done now, TO GIVE ONE HALF THE COST FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF NEW ROADS BUILT ON A PLAN PREPARED BY OUR COUNTY ENGINEER AND APPROVED BY THIS COURT.

This would not only be an economic way to construct new pikes or gravel roads but it would stimulate community interest in roads and would act as an automatic safe guard against building pikes over unimportant roads. Should progressive people living off of main roads give half the cost of construction our county could well afford to pay the other half of construction. Whether this proposition of good roads carries or fails in November this plan should be adopted by our Fiscal Court at once.

Another question will face our Fiscal Court if our question should prevail. Where will the money come from for purchasing these pikes?

A bond issue could furnish the initial cost. Here we are faced with a very wise provision in our law which will not allow a quick, unguarded sentiment to throw a county into debt at once. It will be necessary for a year to elapse and then the Fiscal Court will submit to the voters of the county a bond issue and in this question the voters of the county must know how much of the bond issue will go for new roads and how much will be spent for purchasing old pikes. Further, all bonding votes can only carry with a two-thirds majority. The maximum bond issue of Boone county in round numbers is $140,000. According to the plan outlined above this would build 200 miles of new road at once, but these various communities according to this plan would not work up enough sentiment to raise the funds for roads over 100 miles in less than five years. As for the cost of all pikes in this county it ought not be more than $70,000.

The cost of maintaining roads will be lessened by the purchasing of modern road machinery. In the construction of new roads the people will learn to use the methods and machinery that will lessen the cost of maintenance.

There are two classes of people who are voting for this proposition. One who want to do away with toll gates. This is the first step in that direction. The other class, who want more turnpikes and better roads. To this latter class I belong. I do not favor the doing away with our toll gates until all our roads are piked and we have enough funds to maintain our roads and the pikes that will be acquired.

I believe that the voters of this county will rest and ought to cast a majority for this proposition. Because we are the only county of which we know that has not passed this enabling act; because our sister counties have pulled out of the mud in this way, because our people can be brought closer to market and much of our real estate will be made more valuable, and because there is a bill before our Congress which, according to the best authority, will be passed this winter for the benefit of postal roads and when that bill becomes a law Boone county will not secure a cent of benefit from it in our present condition. This one reason is enough to secure my vote.

If we have better roads it will cost us more taxes. This enabling act upon which we are voting will not free the pikes but will open to us the door of opportunity.

EDGAR C. RILEY.

If the RECORDER understands the tax problem the vote for "Free Turnpikes and Gravel Roads" will carry with it, if it carries, only about $18,000 road tax can be collected each year, in which event there will not be enough road funds with which to begin buying and freeing roads.

CHANGE IN OUR TAX LAWS NEEDED

Constitutional Amendment To Be Voted On In November

EQUITABLE SYSTEM DEMANDED

Last General Assembly Passed an Amendment to the State Constitution Relating to Revenue and Taxation.

Frankfort, Ky.—(Special)—The last General Assembly in Kentucky passed an amendment to the State Constitution relating to revenue and taxation with a view of abolishing the antiquated general property tax and substituting a more flexible system known to be more equitable and productive of greater revenue in other states.

The tax commission appointed under another act at the same session made a thorough investigation and reported unanimously in condemnation of the present law and strongly urged the adoption of the amendment by the voters at the November election.

It is a significant fact that since the adoption of the present Constitution in 1891, which provided that "taxes should be uniform on all property," a large volume of personal property has disappeared from the assessors rolls for the simple reason that such property was taxed out of existence or at least out of sight.

The owner of a bond, for instance, who received 4% interest and was called upon to pay in some instances 1½% or more in taxes either sold his bond or failed to return it for taxation and cash, notes, bonds, stocks in foreign corporations and such like investments are apparently no longer owned by Kentuckians.

Burden of Taxes Transferred.

This has had a tendency to transfer the burden of taxation to real estate and other property in sight and is not only unequal but unjust.

The real estate owner has sought to diminish its value and in order to protect himself transfers of property for "one dollar and other valuable considerations" has demoralized the true values and leaves the assessor no guide to follow.

Our citizens have unblushingly omitted such items in their returns for assessment and have felt justified in doing so.

The finances of the state have fallen into confusion and revenue agents and arbitrary boards of so-called "Equalization" have failed to discover such property and secure their assessment.

Under the present law every man is practically his own assessor and the courts have sustained the practice, as the law permits no other course.

General Property Tax Desirable.

Other states have long since recognised the inefficiency of the "General Property Tax," and in these states we see enterprise rewarded and wealth accumulating, while the tendency in Kentucky has been to hide our light and incidentally our valuables for fear of the tax collector's discovery.

Our progress has been retarded. Our population diminished and aside from the land owners and some merchants we do not seem to have much wealth left in the state.

Money like water flows along the lines of least resistance, and if we throw up a dam, however slight, it will be diverted.

Such a trifling obstacle as taxes, if unequally distributed, may prove to be a barrier of insurmountable proportions, however insignificant it may seem from a casual view.

No one desires willingly to become a law breaker, a deceiver or an evader, and yet he must he all of these if he follows the old maxim, "When in Rome you must do as the Romans do."

Is this true? Go look at the assessors books and see where men who are known to be wealthy get off by paying little or no taxes on personal property assessed by themselves.

Do self respecting men care to follow this example?

A shrewd business man may have large investments in bonds and fail to return them for taxation by many well known practices of evasion. He receives the full return on his investment.

A widow or orphan may be left bonds and the estate may have to be settled in court. The revenue agent finds it out and sues for omitted assessments of former years and the assessor puts them on the tax list. The widow and orphan are compelled to pay two or three per cent in taxes and live on the remainder.

Is such a system fair?

Taxes, in a free self-governed country, should be the least matter to worry about and yet they can be made so unfair and irksome they drive people away and keep others from coming in. This is happening all the time in Kentucky.

We have a chance to remedy this evil and if disregarded now we will have to wait another five years before it presents itself again.

It is a clear duty to vote for this constitutional amendment at the November election and every citizen in the state should vote himself and urge his neighbor to do the same if Kentucky is ever to be dragged out of its lowlands and rise to the front rank of progress, good will and peace.

CHANGE IN TAX LAWS NEEDED

Why Are 600,000 of Kentucky's People Living in Other States?—A True Story With a Moral—What Do You Think About These Conditions?

A traveler recently, while waiting to change cars at a little town in Southeastern Kentucky, had a conversation with an intelligent business man of the place and ascertained the following facts:

"What is your population?" he asked.

"About two thousand."

"What is your principal industry?"

"We have none, unless stores count."

"Have you no factories?"

"None except a tombstone maker."

"How is your population employed?"

"Well, we have fifty-two stores, nine hotels and restaurants, two newspapers, one laundry, one photograph gallery and two banks."

"You seem to have good railroad facilities."

"Yes, we have railroads running north, south, east and west; twenty-six passenger trains in and out every day and no end of freight trains."

"What does the surrounding country produce?"

"Coal, timber, clay, stone, corn, wheat, tobacco, fruit and vegetables."

"What becomes of all these?"

"They are shipped to different parts of the country."

"Has your town increased in population?"

"Not much in the past twenty-five years."

"How are your young people employed?"

"They mostly drift away and get work in the cities."

"Has it never occurred to you to start a few factories and keep them at home?"

"Yes, it has been tried, and we at one time had a commercial club, whose aim it was to get some factories here, but they couldn't seem to do anything."

"What were the obstacles?"

"Well, some people were induced to come here and found cheap land, cheap fuel, good shipping facilities, but no labor, and some of the inquisitive ones asked about taxes, etc., and nothing came of it."

"What is the trouble with your taxes?"

"Well, you see, we have the general property tax in Kentucky, and when they were shown the assessors' lists and found they had to pay taxes on about seventy-five different kinds of property, and all at the same rate, they ducked."

"Is this true about the taxes?"

"Well, it is pretty near the facts. The city and county and state and schools all have to be paid, and if a man starts a factory he has to pay on his machinery, his raw material and finished goods; his cash and accounts, and, of course, on his land and buildings, and a good many other things, including his watch and stickpin, and, if he wants to educate his children, he must pay on the books and piano and his horse and buggy and almost everything but his shirt, and the trouble is, he never knows exactly what his taxes will be. If he omits any of the seventy-five things the legislature could think of and the miscellaneous things he must think of himself, there is the revenue agent who gets a commission on anything he can find, and then there is the county equalization board, which scrutinizes his returns and adds what it likes, and then the state board at Frankfort takes a whack at it and generally raises the whole list, and it simply keeps everybody going who has anything to be taxed."

"Why don't you change the tax laws?"

"Well, they put the law relating to revenue and taxation in the state constitution, and it takes about five years to effect a change, and it is hard to get the voters to understand the question. The last legislature passed an amendment and it will be voted on at the November (1913) election, and if it is ratified the change will be made."

"I live in Pennsylvania, and every town in that state as large as yours has a factory of some kind, and many of them several. They employ the young men and women and keep them and the money they earn at home. But here comes my train, and all I can say is, you people should wake up, and if your tax laws are oppressive, change them, and your state will blossom like the rose."

"Well, good-bye, stranger. I intend to vote for the amendment myself, and may be others will do the same. It can't be any worse than the present system, and I surely would like to see some smokestacks looming up in these parts. Farewell."

FROM REPORT OF KENTUCKY TAX REVISION COMMISSION, 1910.

"So long as the state adheres to its present system of taxation fixed by constitutional provisions, it will impose upon its citizens a very serious handicap in the competition with the citizens of other states more favored in their tax laws, and must inevitably lose both desirable population and much needed capital."

For You and Your Wife

A cheerful, pretty bedroom will help you to start your day in a cheerful, pleasant mood. Its a haven of rest for you to come back to at night. And all day long its a pleasure to your wife.

To make a pretty bedroom it is more important to have tasteful furniture that harmonizes, than furniture that merely costs a lot. A brass bed, or a pretty iron bed if you prefer, dresser and chiffonier, a low rocking chair and one or two straight back chairs to match, a shirtwaist box, light colored rug on the floor,—all this does not cost vrey much, IF YOU BUY FROM US, and makes a truly pretty room. Come in and talk it over.

Don't forget to get a STEARNS & FOSTER mattress. That is what makes your bedroom a haven of rest. No other mattress is so comfortable.

Ain't It The Truth?

"A gentleman requested that we publish the cause of this high cost of living," says an exchange. "Our views in a condensed form are that we've let a lot of timber go to waste and are now buying wire fenceing and lumber from foreign countries; we throw away our grease and ashes and buy our soap; we raise too many dogs and buy too many hogs; we raise too many weeds and buy too many vegetables; we catch a 5c fish with a $4 rod; we build a fine school house and send our children off to be educated; we send our boys out with a $40 gun and a $10 dog to hunt 5c rabbits and 10c birds; we buy improved farm machinery and let it stand out in the field to rust and rot; and lastly we mortgage our homes to buy four-priced automobiles that we don't know how to operate or keep up. It is the cost of high living and not the high cost of living that ails this country."—Ex.

BOONE COUNTY COURT.

Regular Term, 1 day September, 1913
M. J. Crouch and others on petition.

It appearing that at the last regular term of this Court, held August 4th, 1913, M. J. Crouch and five hundred and thirty-four (534) others filed their petition herein asking that a vote be taken upon the proposition to have free turnpikes and gravel roads in Boone County; and it further appearing upon proof heard in open Court, that said petition is signed by a number of legal voters in this county equal to fifteen (15) per cent of the total vote cast in this county at the last preceding general election held in Boone County for the year 1912, and no exceptions, protests or objections having been made, taken or filed herein against said petition, it is now ordered and directed that B. B. Hume, Sheriff, cause a poll to be opened in each and all of the regular voting precincts in Boone County, at the next regular County Election to be held on November 4th, 1913, to take the sense of the qualified voters of Boone Co. upon the proposition to have free turnpikes and gravel roads in said county. Said election will be held by the same officers that hold said regular November Election for said year 1913, and in all respects in accordance with the provisions of the general election laws of this State; and the question "Are you in favor of free turnpikes and gravel roads" shall be printed on the ballots, as provided by section 1459 Kentucky Statutes; and the Clerk of this Court will cause said question to be printed on the official ballots for said general election.

Said Sheriff will cause this order to be published in the Boone County Recorder, a weekly newspaper published in this county for at least thirty days prior to said election; and he will also advertise said election by written or printed hand-bills, posted in at least four conspicuous places in each voting precinct in this county for the same length of time.

The Clerk of this court will, within five (5) days after the entry of this order, certify same to B. B. Hume, a sheriff of Boone Co. Kentucky.

State of Kentucky

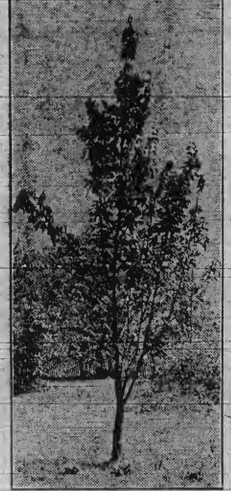
PEAR BLIGHT DESTRUCTIVE

Disease Peculiar to the Pomaceous Fruits of America

ATTACKS LIMBS OR BLOSSOMS

Blight Usually Attracts Especial Attention During the Early Spring, Shortly After the Blooming Period —Sanitary Precautions Necessary.



(J. H. Carmody, Horticultural Department, Kentucky Experiment Station.)

Pear blight is a disease peculiar to the pomaceous fruits of America. It is most destructive to the pear, quince, and apple. In some instances it has been known to attack the plum. Cultivated plants are more liable to attack although mountain ash and wild species of the apple often serve as host plants.

The disease may attack the limbs, blossoms, or the fruit of the tree. In advanced cases all three may be diseased at the same time. However, it is generally noticed on the young succulent twig growth, hence the origin of the term "twig blight." Other names oftentimes applied are fire blight, canker, blossom blight and several others.

Blight usually attracts especial attention early in the spring shortly after the blooming period. It is first noticed when the leaf growth on the tips of the younger branches begins to turn brown and later on this is followed by blackened tufts of leaves all over the tree. If left unmolested the whole limb and even the trunk of the tree may become infected. An infallible guide for determining if a tree is affected with blight is to notice whether or not the leaves remain during the winter. No other disease of the pomaceous fruits is characterized by the leaves clinging to the branches during the dormant season.

Fire blight is a bacterial disease. The bacteria remain alive during the winter in cankered areas on the trunks and limbs of trees previously affected. As soon as the weather [illegible] to warm these organisms become active and multiply very rapidly, gradually spreading all the while into healthy bark and wood tissue. Often during damp, warm weather these cankered areas or holdovers as they are called break open and exude a sweet gummy substance that carries with it millions of the small organisms. Insects, especially wasps and bees are attracted by this exudate and become smeared by it. Later on they visit the flowers of the tree thus carrying the dangerous organisms where they will do the most harm. In a short time the blossoms begin to show signs of blight and later on affected twigs will also be noticed.

Since the organism causing pear blight works within the host it is very evident that an external application of a fungicide or an insecticide would be effectual. The commercial preparations that are introduced into the sap have not proven effectual as yet. In fact harm has often resulted from their use because the injury made by the insertion often serves as a means of entrance for the harmful bacteria.

The most effectual way to control the disease is to keep a strict watch on the orchard at all times, especially during the growing season, and remove all diseased branches as soon as they are noticed. Also inspect the orchard during the winter and early spring for the cankers and remove them before the bacteria they contain becomes active. In order to hinder the disease from getting down on the trunk and main limbs it is a good plan to rub off all the blossoms, fruit spurs, and water sprouts from the larger branches, as they start. This will be a great aid in the prevention of body cankers.

SOME MEN EASILY "RATTLED"

Of the Number Is the One Who Tells This Story of His Experience a Few Mornings Ago.

"Women are so impulsive," said a man the other day. "I was awakened from a sound sleep one morning by my wife crying in an excited manner. 'Henry, Henry, come quick!' I sprang from bed and ran to the head of the stairs and at once smelled smoke. Then I shouted, 'Take the baby, run to the corner and turn in an alarm!' I scrambled back to the room and snatched up some clothes. Then I grabbed little Elizabeth, who was sleeping with me, under my arm and dashed downstairs. 'Where is it?' I exclaimed, running here and there to locate the fire. Behold, my wife was sitting in the dining-room with the baby in her lap as calm as could be, with nothing out of the usual except a smile of joy on her face.

"'Why don't you get out of here? Do you want to be burned alive?' I shouted.

"'Why, Henry, what in the world is the matter with you? Are you crazy?'

"'No, I'm not crazy. I want to know where the fire is.'

"'Fire! There is no fire,' said she.

"'What did you yell fire for, then?'

"'I didn't.'

"'Well, what in thunder is it then?'

"'Why, Charlotte has a tooth!'

"'Goodness! I thought the house was on fire!'

"'How stupid!' remarked my wife, coolly, as she placed the baby in her high chair and started for the kitchen. 'Why don't you put Elizabeth down? Do you intend to carry her under your arm all day? And you had better get dressed, too. Breakfast is almost ready.'"

COULD ESTIMATE THE WHOLE

Witness, Forced to Admit Lack of Knowledge of Details, Made One Telling Point.

A well known architect was summoned as a witness in a Long Island court in a suit over the cost of a building. The lawyer whose duty it was to cross-examine started in to attack the credibility of the witness.

"Do you know how much a hundred these bricks cost?"

"I do not.'

"Do you know how much this cement cost per bag?"

"No."

"Do you know how expensive sand is down here?"

"I can't say that I do exactly."

The lawyer looked at the witness with fine scorn.

"And yet you pretend to come here and qualify as an expert! How can you give any kind of an opinion on how much this building ought to have cost when you don't know the prices of the material it's made of?"

The witness looked at the lawyer with a flash in his eye that boded ill.

"Well," he said, "I don't know the price of needles, nor the price of thread, nor how much cheap cotton material cost; but I don't hesitate to express a solemn opinion that that suit of clothes you're wearing cost about five dollars and a half."—New York Evening Post.

Truly a Turbulent Republic.

There are nineteen volcances in Guatemala, the greatest having an altitude of 16,300 feet. There are fifteen in Salvador, thirteen in Nicaragua and twelve in Costa Rica. In 1835 the volcano Cosiguina in Nicaragua (only 3,835 feet high), erupted sending forth her ashes in a circle of 1,500 miles diameter. The republics of Nicaragua and Salvador were in darkness for three days, and the thunderings were heard as far as Oajacs, Mexico, Santa Maria, the volcano which nearly destroyed Quezaltenango on April 18, 1893, erupting on October 25 of the same year, covered villages, towns, country with an ashy sand to the depth of from two to fifteen feet.

The severe disturbances in Guatamala City by the recent earthquakes is alarming. The present situation of the capital was chosen because it was believed to be exempt from destruction by earthquakes.—Christian Herald.

Fear Revival of Suttee.

A revival of suttee is feared in India. Within the short period of three or four days no less than two cases of women who committed suicide on the death of their husbands were reported, and probably others have taken place but have not reached the newspapers. When a year or so ago, a young Bengal lady burned herself to death in Calcutta, attention was drawn to the danger arising from the deification of the suttee. The house where the practice of suttee was revived became a center of pilgrimage to the people in the locality, and the relatives of the dead lady were importuned over and over again to repeat the story of the suttee. Glowing accounts of the suttee also appeared in the vernacular papers. Since then no less than half a dozen cases of women performing suttee have come to light in Bengal.

Begging Off.

"Can you direct me to the best hotel in this town?" asked the stranger who, after sadly watching the train depart, had set his satchel upon the station platform.

"I can," replied the man, who was waiting for a train going the other way, "but I hate to do it."

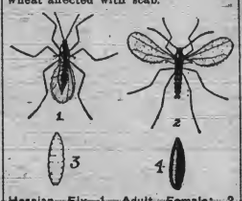
"Why?"

"Because you will think after you've seen it that I'm a liar."

DISEASES OF WHEAT CROP

Wheat Smuts, Rust and Hessian Fly Common Troubles of Kentucky Farmer

REMEDY FOR THE DISEASES



Seldom That a Crop of Wheat Is Matured Without Being Affected to Some Extent By the Attacks to Which the Wheat Crop Is Subject.

(Ralph Kenney, Department of Agronomy, Kentucky Experiment Station.)

It is very seldom that a crop of wheat is matured without being affected to some extent by some of the common diseases to which the crop is subject, as scab, rust and smut.

Scab is a fungus disease which attacks the glumes or chaff of the wheat plant and results in shrunken kernels. The disease is identified by the pinkish spots produced at the base of glumes attacked.

There is no known treatment for this disease, except that it has been recommended that the stubble be burned if wheat is to follow a crop of wheat affected with scab.

Hessian Fly—1. Adult Female; 2. Adult Male; 3. Larva Before "Flaxseed;" 4. "Flaxseed" Stage.

The smuts are of two distinct kinds, viz: loose smut and stinking smooth. The loss from loose smut does not vary so widely from year to year as does that from stinking smut, which may be very great one year and possibly negligible the following year.

The smuts can be so easily and cheaply controlled that their presence in a field of wheat is a manifestation of carelessness on the part of the owner.

For loose smut of wheat, Formalin is not effective and the following treatment known as the modified hot water treatment is the more certain preventative.

Soak the seed wheat in cold water for a period of four hours and follow by immersing in hot water at a temperature of 29 degrees Fah. for 10 minutes. Thorough drying after this treatment is not injurious to germination. However, the treatment is apt to be slightly injurious and allowence for this must be made by sowing a slightly greater quantity of seed per acre. It is not advisable to treat all the seed sown in this manner. Treat only enough for the seed plot of an acre or so, and sow the main field from the product of this plot the following year.

Stinking smut or "bunt" of wheat may be prevented by either a hot water treatment, by Formalin or by the use of Bluestone.

1. Formalin Treatment:

(a) Dipping:—Procure from a druggist formalin which he guarantees to be a full 40 per cent solution of formaldehyde. Pour one pint of this into a fifty gallon barrel of water and stir thoroughly. Put the wheat to be treated into coarse burlap sacks, about one-half bushel to a sack. Dip into the solution and keep there for about ten minutes or until thoroughly wet: drain off into the barrel and set aside for five to ten hours. Then empty out, spread in a thin layer and dry sufficiently to sow, or thoroughly dry and store in a perfectly cleaned place. If sown while damp allow a greater bulk of wheat to make up for the swollen grain.

(b) Sprinkling. Put the wheat to be treated on a clean floor or canvas and with a sprinkling can sprinkle the solution over the wheat shoveling over constantly until the grain is all wet. Shovel into a pile and cover with wet sacks or a good canvas and leave five to ten hours, when it should be treated as in the case of dipped wheat.

2. Bluestone Treatement.

Dissolve five pounds of Bluestone in 25 to 30 gallons of water and dip or sprinkle the wheat as in the case of the formalin treatment, but drain off well and partially dry at once so the solution will not soak into the grain. Probably the most serious of the insect pests affecting the wheat plant is the Hessian Fly.

A slight infestation this year may mean a much greater one next year unless precautions are taken this fall. Where it is present on a farm or in a neighborhood, the best means of keeping it in check is late sowing by all the farmers of that particular neighborhood. Wheat should not be sown before the fifth to the tenth of October in such cases, and if sown this late the early frosts usually prevent serious infestation by the fly.

This late sowing demands that the land be in splendid condition for quick growth of the wheat, and the extra time can profitably be spent in a more thorough working of the seed bed. In this way the bad effects of late sowing may be largely overcome.

HUSBAND RESCUED DESPAIRING WIFE

After Four Years of Discouraging Conditions, Mrs. Bullock Gave Up in Despair. Husband Came to Rescue.

Catron, Ky.—In an interesting letter from this place, Mrs. Bettie Bullock writes as follows: "I suffered for four years, with womanly troubles, and during this time, I could only sit up for a little while, and could not walk anywhere at all. At times, I would have severe pains in my left side.

The doctor was called in, and his treatment relieved me for a while, but I was soon confined to my bed again. After that, nothing seemed to do me any good; I had gotten so weak I could not stand, and I gave up in despair.

At last, my husband got me a bottle of Cardui, the woman's tonic, and I commenced taking it. From the very first dose, I could tell it was helping me. I can now walk two miles without its tiring me, and am doing my work."

If you are all run down from womanly troubles, don't give up in despair. Try Cardui, the woman's tonic. It has helped more than a million women, in its 50 years of wonderful success, and should surely help you, too. Your druggist has sold Cardui for years. He knows what it will do. Ask him. He will recommend it. Begin taking Cardui today.

WORK ON PUBLIC ROADS.

People Urged to Work Two Days On Public Roads, Oct. 24 and 25.

Frankfort, Oct. 1.—Governor McCreary issued a proclamation today designating October 24 and 25 as Good Roads days and calling on all citizens on those days to get out and work the roads of their counties between the hours of 8 a. m. and 5 p. m.

The proclamation follows:

"I have received letters from various persons requesting me to issue a proclamation designating two days for work on the roads of the State, and the Kentucky Roads Association, held Sept. 16, 1913, at the State Fair, Louisville, Ky., unanimously adopted the following resolution:

"Be it resolved, that this association request the Governor, Jas. B. McCreary, to designate two days in the part of October to be set aside for the purpose of work on the public roads in the State of Kentucky, and that Messrs. Harry Summers, Joseph Bosworth and R. C. Terrell be appointed as a committee to wait upon the Governor and present this resolution to him.

Pursuant to these requests, I now issue this, my proclamation, calling upon the people in every county of the State of Kentucky to work on the roads in their respective counties, on Friday and Saturday, October 24 and 25, 1913, commencing at 8 o'clock in the morning, each day and continuing until five o'clock in the afternoon.

"The county judge and engineer of each county are directed to aid the people in complying with this request and in circulating proper notices; and they are authorized to select such persons as may be needed to assist. In every county where there is no engineer or where they fail to act the sheriff or other persons are authorized to organize and comply with this proclamation.

"Good roads facilitate the labor of farmers in bringing their products to market; increase the benefits of rural education by providing means by which the children of the State can go regularly to the neighborhood schools furnish a better and easier way for the people to go to church, and greatly enhance the value of farm lands.

"This proclamation refers to dirt roads, turnpike and gravel roads, and, as Kentucky always takes the lead in every movement and as Kentuckians desire the betterment of our highways, they must come forward with enthusiasm and energy, and show the people of other States that they can equal or surpass them in the improvement of their roads.

"In testimony whereof I have caused these letters to be made patent, and the seal of the Commonwealth to be hereto affixed. Done at Frankfort the first day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and thirteen, and in the one hundred and twenty-second year of the Commonwealth.

JAMES B. McCREARY.

"By the Governor: C. F. CRECELIUS, Secretary of State."

Oldest Living Person.

Probably the oldest person now living is Gertrude Alto, whose home is at Old Town, San Diego, Cal. She is of Mexican Azete Indian blood, and is believed to be in her 121th year of age. She saw the morning dawn, the noonday brightness and the waning twilight and afterglow of her own generation, and now stands as its lone surviving representative a full generation after its sunset. She is hale and hearty and has a real relish for her food. Through her granddaughter as interpreter she declares she never saw a sick day in all her long life. She is still able to easily walk about her immediate neighborhood when aided by some one to lead her, as she is nearly blind. In her earlier years it was her delight to go five miles up the valley on foot to the old San Diego Mission for the service at 6:30 in the morning. She attributes her great age and strength to her lifelong regular habits and outdoor life.—Christian Herald.

Teachers' Institute.

The Boone County Teachers Institute began its annual session at the Universalist church last Monday morning, with W. L. Jayne, Superintendent of schools, of Boyd county, as Instructor. Mrs. Stewart, of Rowan county, finding at the last moment almost that it would be impossible for her to attend.

The Institute is doing good work and the teachers appear to be very much interested.

Much Confused Question.

It is very evident that the good roads campaign is on in earnest in this county, and it is further very decidedly evident that the sentiment in this county is largely in favor of the improvement of the public roads, but owing to the legislative red tape necessary to acquire good roads it is going to be difficult to so unify that sentiment on the proposition now being presented as to carry it at the approaching election, as there is one element of voters and property owners in the county—that is opposed to the increase of taxation for any purpose; there is another element that is willing to have the taxes increased for the improvement of the public roads but is opposed to freeing the turnpikes; there is another element that wants the turnpikes freed and is willing to stop there, and there is still another element that wants the main public roads in the county piked and is opposed to freeing the present toll roads until the other pikes are completed. Each of the elements above mentioned, except the first, is in favor of building pikes in the county and ultimately having all pikes free, but to reconsile these elements to the pending proposition will require hard and constant labor from now until the election, for as the matter stands it is badly confused, and those opposed to the increase of taxes will have their position explained to the voters before the election as they have no idea of lying down.

Dynamite outrages said to outdo the exploits of the McNamaras and Ortie McManigal were confessed by Geo. E. Davis, a union iron worker, as the result of his being trailed by Robert J. Foster, a Louisville detective. Dais was arrested in New York, and as the result of his confession, Harry Jones, secretary-treasurer of the International Ironworkers' Union, was arrested in Indianapolis. The confession clears up the conspiracy case started two years ago and implicates several men convicted in the dynamite conspiracy trials.

More About Scarcito of Beef.

It is full time for consumers to take alarm when the beef packers complain that there is not enough market beef in the country to keep the packing plants at work, and appropriate $500,000 to stimulate the farmers to the growing of more live stock. We have not been accustomed to pay much attention to the repeated prophecies of a meat famine, but it is time to take notice when the packers devote half a million dollars to the work of averting it. Meat is high enough now in all conscience, high enough to compel consumers to curtail seriously their supply on the family table, and high enough, it would seem, to induce farmers to enter more largely upon its production. To make the farmers realize that beef and pork, at 9 cents a pound or more on the hoof, is the most profitable form in which crops can be marketed, is what the packers are going to attempt with this large sum. They are going to carry on an educational campaign, additional to that which has been carried on for a long time by agricultural colleges and railroads, to say nothing of the press.

The scarcity of beef is something the ordinary man does not understand. He can not see why there should be any. Roughly speaking it is the result of two causes. First, the range industry is declining and farmers have not gone into live stock growing fast enough to make up the loss. Second, farmers have been selling calves instead of raising them, on the theory that it did not pay to feed them for two years to make beef. Many have even gone so far as to kill calves, believing that even the cost of raising them for veal is more than the selling price. This is especially true of dairy farmers who keep Jersey and other small sized cattle, which do not take on weight for beef. There are other contributing causes, but these are the two great ones—falling off of the range industry and selling or killing of calves.

There is a ray of hope resulting from the drought of the present season. The farmers who have come thru it the best are those keeping live stock, growing forage crops and having silos for feed. The farmers who have been hard hit are the growers of crops for the market. As a result there is going to be a large abandonment of market cropping and adoption of live stock farming. The packers will find the farmers in a more receptive mood for their campaign of education than they were a year ago. Perhaps we shall not encounter that veal famine after all, if the season of the present year is pressed home to the farmers who have lost their oats, corn and hay crops and are hard up, while their live stock growing neighbors are getting along nicely. Experience is the most convincing school. Nevertheless, it would be prudent for consumers to begin experimenting in the art of substituting less costly food for meat.—Ex.

Kentucky Good Roads Days.

In compliance with the request of the State Good Roads Association, the Governor has designated Friday and Saturday, October 24 and 25, as Good Road days for Kentucky.

The people in every county should heed the Governor's proclamation. A girdle of good roads cannot be put around the Common wealth in two days, but if there is earnest and united effort some beneficient work may be done. What is now important, interest will be stimulated in the pressing question of highway improvement.

We are wasting millions of dollars in Kentucky in desultory efforts at road building and repair. The roads in some of our counties are little, if any, better than they were forty years ago, this despite the expenditure of large sums every year in inefficient methods of maintenance. The tax payers are not getting a run for their money. They have been patient and forbearing; they have grumbled a little, perhaps, but they have submitted. In the main their action may be likened to charity which "suffereth long and is kind."

The good roads mileage in Kentucky is growing very slowly when compared with the vigorous work that is going on in some of our neighboring States. There has been much talk of good roads in recent years, but it requires something more substantial than talk to build highways that are good all the year around, and that is the sort of highways which most of our counties need. The good road from the farm to the county seat, the railroad station or the landing is the road in which the masses of the people should be interested. More than likely it is in bad condition right now and will be infinitely worse next winter. Two days of co-operative effort can do much to improve such a road and the service should be cheerfully given.

The roads belong to the people and the people should manifest some concern in their property. Good roads enhance the general prosperity and promote the general welfare, while bad roads are a handicap and an abomination. The county that has no decent highways is behind the times and is not awake to its own best interests. The Kentucky Good Roads days should be signalized by a great outpouring of citizens in every county. Should that be the case the enthusiasm that would be inspired would be worth millions to the State.—C.-J.

Our base ball fans are anxiously awaiting the Belleview-Lawrenceburg game to be played at Petersburg next Saturday afternoon. If there was any betting on the result it would be at even money now.

Profitable Sheep Notes.

Understand well your breed—or get out of the sheep-raising business!

Good sheep; good care; good feed and pasturage—with these essentials, who could fail in sheep raising?

Keeping salt before the sheep at all times, goes a long way toward holding parasites and intestinal worms in check.

A breed that produces a satisfactory fleece of wool and good mutton, is the one to which the farmer should tie his fate.

The sheep, especially those which are somewhat weak, infirm or debilitated, should be kept in out of the chill, fall rains now coming on.

While sheep do require somewhat different handling and feeding from any other farm animal, it is very doubtful if they actually demand any more than any other stock.

Although we like a ram that is not cross and quarrelsome, he must possess plenty of snap and vim, else he will prove an unsatisfactory breeder, his offspring lacking in vigor.

Any aged ewes that appear sick and run-down often need nothing more in the world than an old, decaying tooth filed down or removed entirely from the mouth, so the animals can eat well.

Small, weak, run-down lambs, like "runty" pigs, usually require only that they be removed and separated from other stock and fed a little more grain and rough age, to turn them into thrifty, profitable animals.

For the sake of saving the unborn lambs of the flock, and to prevent the loss of valuable wool, pull or break all protruding nails out of the fences and sheds where the sheep haunt most. Like wise, watch for snaps of boards sticking out around these spots.

Burrs, burdocks and thistles are easily and quickly removed from the sheeps' wool if it is done shortly after they become attached to the fleece, but if they are left in it for awhile, it is impossible to remove them without wasting considerable wool and giving the animals more or less pain.

While sheep do not require as great an amount of bedding as other animals on the farm, a certain quantity of it is imperative, as it will prevent their fleeces from becoming soiled and to the health and comfort of the flock, and act as a medium thru which their manure will cling together so it can be handled.

One important point not considered by many in summing up the merits of sheep, is the cheapness with which they can be kept a goodly part of the year, as they can be turned into odd nooks and corners where weeds and brush abound, and hustle their own living. They may even be turned into the corn field during the fall months, where they will pick the tender, nutritious blades from the corn without molesting the ears. This is especially fine for the lambs. Then, too, the sheep will clean up any weeds that have come up since the corn was laid by, or any that are in nooks around fences and ditches in the field, thus preventing these pests from going to seed. As scavengers in this respect, sheep are unequaled; while at the same time their manure thus is scattered over the land, adding to the fertility of the soil.—M. C. in Indiana Farmer.

Farmers' Bulletin.

A Webster county farmer gives some good advice to his brother farmers in urging them to read the bulletins that are sent out by the State and national Departments of Agriculture.

This farmer tells of his personal experience. "I raised," he says, "8,130 pounds of tobacco on three and one-eighth acres year before last; I have increased my wheat yield seven bushels to the acre and this year I expect to raise right at 100 bushels of corn to the acre on a nine-acre block. This, he says, he has done as a result of following the instructions given in farmers bulletins.

The average farmer is much too chary about accepting advice of this kind. The fact is the average farmer has a contempt for "book farming" and looks upon bulletins as something in that line and therefore to be sedulously avoided. There are, however, many farmers who read the bulletins and profit by them. Such publications are in greater demand and there can be no doubt that they are exercising an important influence for better farming.

No argument is required to prove that a man who has increased his wheat yield 7 bushels to the acre as a result of reading to find out how he could produce seven bushels more of wheat to the acre than he formerly had been producing.

The bulletins issued by the United States Department of Agriculture and by the experiment stations and State agricultural institutions deserve the attention of every progressive farmer. They deal with a great variety of subjects. No one farmer will find use for them all, perhaps but there are few of them which may not be read to advantage.—C.-J.

Against Scale Insects.
Spray in the Fall—(after leaves have fallen) with GRASSELI LIME-SULPHUR SOLUTION
For the Following Reasons:
First—The ground is in better condition for moving spray machinery, as it is often soft and mushy in the spring.
Second—The scale insects are more susceptible to the Lime-Sulphur Solution in the fall, as the waxy covering is soft. This covering hardens during the winter months.
Third—There is not so much work crowding at this time as in the spring.

The farmers in this county are increasing the acreage of rye sowed year by year. Not many years since a field of rye was unusual in this county, but now it is sowed for early pasture after which, in many instances, it is turned under in the spring and followed with a crop of corn.

The next thing of real interest to the farmers of this county is the corn show which will be held under the auspices of Pomona Grange. Liberal premiums will be awarded, a fact that will cause quite a good display. The corn show ought to bring together a large number of farmers to discuss the merits of the several varieties of corn exhibited.

The posters printed in the interest of the Good Roads campaign contains the following explanation of what the vote to be taken at the November election means:

"Not a vote to bond the county but an Enabling Act authorizing the Fiscal Court to take steps leading to an improved road system. If bonds are ever issued, another vote must be taken. Boone is the only county in Kentucky that has never passed the Enabling Act. The maximum bond issue for Boone county is $140,000. The maximum county tax that can be levied for any year aside from school tax, is 50 cents on $100. The benefits to be derived by the county and by every individual in it are incalculable."

Mrs. Sidney Gaines Dead.

Mrs. Sidney Gaines (nee Dora Lee Goodridge) died at the German Deaconess Hospital, Cincinnati, about 5 p. m., last Saturday, where she had submitted to an operation for troubles from which she had long been a sufferer.

She was born July 9th, 1884, and was the second child of Thomas D. and Drucilla Goodridge, and is survived by her mother, and two brothers, James W. Goodridge, of Burlington, and Leslie Goodridge, of Erlanger.

She was married to Sidney Gaines, August 19th, 1885. Besides her husband, and one son, Cecil L. Gaines, of Erlanger, she leaves a host of friends who mourn with the grief stricken relatives and her husband and son. Mrs. Gaines was possessed of a lovable disposition and was held in the highest esteem by all with whom she was acquainted and her departure breaks up a most congenial home by the removal of a devoted wife and a loving and indulgent mother.

The interment took place in the Odd-Fellows cemetery at 4 p. m. Tuesday after brief services conducted at the residence by Rev. J. W. Campbell, pastor of the local Baptist church.

The bereaved husband and son have the sympathy of a very large circle of relatives and friends.

The funeral was in charge of undertaker C. Scott Chambers, of Walton.

HOT SPRINGS, ARK., LETTER.

Hot Springs is always an interesting place to visit. Here at all seasons can be found people from all over the world seeking health, recreation and sight seeing.

Hot Springs is an all the year round health and pleasure resort, but the busy season runs from December until March.

There is no question about the great curative power of the waters as can be attested by the thousands of afflicted who have visited the place every year.

The amusements offered are many and of such great variety that no one need be lonesome.

It is an ideal place for one to come when worn out and in need of rest. So much has been written about Hot Springs, that everybody is familiar with the place.

Hot Springs is a city in a wilderness, having a population of 25,000. The Federal Government some years ago took over the three mountains and one side of the valley. Facing north the right hand side of Central Ave., is under Federal supervision. Here all the principal bath houses are located. The Hot Springs are likewise on the reservation. Thousands of dollars are spent every year by the authorities at Washington beautifying this place and here is located the army and navy hospital.

Many who have never visited Hot Springs have entirely the wrong idea of the place. They think it is populated principally by thugs and a rough, uncouth element. Such is not the case. The residents here are just as refined and observe all social law as scrupulously as any people in the South. Many beautiful homes can be seen here and the modern conveniences are unsurpassed. True, like all resorts, Hot Springs has its rough element and its gambling fraternity. The latter quietly operating under cover, the visitor is more responsible for the gambling than the residents of Hot Springs for the home people seldom gamble and have opposed the open gambling in club houses so vigorously that the laws are pretty well enforced here at present.

Hot Springs is improving right along notwithstanding the present stringency of the money market. A new bath house to cost over $200,000 is to be built at once by Col. Fordice, the Masons are preparing to build a sanitarium and bath house, a new office building is in course of construction and a general get busy air is noticeable everywhere.

Living in Hot Springs is not high. You can live here as cheap as you can in Petersburg or Burlington or you can get Waldor Astoria accommodations at two of the finest hotels here. It is a cosmopolitan city and all sorts and kinds of people gather here.

Being so close to Western Kentucky it is no uncommon thing to walk down Central Ave., and meet five or six Kentucky people.

Headquarters for Kentucky people is the New Hot Springs Bath House of which G. M. Smith is proprietor. His is the only bath house at Hot Springs having furnished rooms in connection. The rates are reasonable and the service all that could be expected. There are 117 doctors on the government list and 40 or 50 more at the springs not permitted by the Federal Board to prescribe the bath.

No drumming for hotels, bath houeses or doctors is permitted, but there is more or less of it done.

During my stay there the town was visited by one of the most destructive fires it has ever had. No one can describe this fire as it really was. Let the reader think for himself of a fire burning over a space of ground one and one-half miles long and one half mile wide with the wind blowing 40 miles an hour, and burning everything in its path, nothing left but the brick walls and chimneys. Hot Springs is a grand place to rest and enjoy yourself.

B. J. CRISLER.

Bad Roads the Cause.

Sam Johnson came into the Recorder's office last Friday morning a living exhibit of the result of bad roads. His being an exhibit came about in this way: He operates a saw mill over on Ashby Fork creek a portion of which is a county road. Mr. Johnson was moving some of the finished product of his mill, which to do, the bad condition of the road compelled him to haul half a load of lumber a distance of four miles, when he would unload and return to his mill and bring another half load of lumber to the point where he left the first half. It was while reloading the first half load that a heavy plank fell on one of Mr. Johnson's feet, mashing it so badly that he was compelled to lay off several days. Mr. Johnson says had it not been for the bad roads it would not have been necessary for him to haul half loads of lumber from his mill, consequently he would not have been crippled. Besides the time he lost his team was also idle and an expense to him. In this one instance the man's loss is largely in excess of what good roads would cost him any one year. Johnson is for better roads.

Will You Be on The Job.

In another column will be found Gov. McCreary's proclamation designating Friday and Saturday, the 24th and 25th inst., as Good Roads days and calling on all citizens to go out and work on the public roads these two days. This same plan has been adopted in other States, and much good work was the result. Every citizen of Boone county is interested in the improvement of the public roads, and there should be a willing response to the Governor's proclamation. If each able bodied man in this county will give two days work on the public roads there will be made a wonderful improvement. In this office are three men who are ready to comply with the Governor's request. How many more are there in Burlington and vicinity. The RECORDER invites all in the county who will work on the roads on the 24th and 25th inst., to send it their names.

The farmers have had fine weather for sowing small grain. The ground has been very dry but the temperature has been such as to make the work of the teams much easier.

JEFF STEPHENS.

George Burkitt, Auctioneer.

The Good Roads people want it distinctly understood that the Enabling Act which they are seeking to have adopted in this county can carry a tax of only twenty-five cents on the $100 for road purposes; not 50 cents as some are lead to believe by the posters that have been sent out.

The postmasters are weighing the mail again. This work is done oftener than it use to be.

MAINTAINING SOIL FERTILITY NOT AN EXPENSIVE PROBLEM

Keeping An Adequate Supply of Organic Matter and Nitrogen Sometimes Difficult—No Soil So Rich That Rebuilding Is Not Necessary At Least Every Five Years

(By E. J. Kinney, Department of Agronomy, Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station.)

In maintaining soil fertility one of the hardest problems to be solved is that of keeping an adequate supply of organic matter and nitrogen in the soil to meet the requirements of profitable crop production. The mineral elements of plant food required in the largest quantities, viz., phosphorous, potassium and calcium, can be supplied in commercial forms at a reasonable cost when deficient. Commercial nitrogen, however, is so expensive that this source can not be employed to any large extent for the production of general farm crops. Nitrogen in the soil is practically all derived from the decay of organic matter and no soil is so rich that continual cropping without returning manue or other material will not soon exhaust it of this element.

Since we can not afford to use commercial nitrogen the only method of maintaining a sufficient supply of this in the soil is by growing leguminous crops and so managing that there will be returned to the soil as manure. Legumes are the only plants that secure their nitrogen except from the soil. Through the agency of bacteria living and working in nodules on their roots they are supplied with combined nitrogen which is manufactured by these bacteria from the free atmospheric nitrogen circulating in the soil. Such plants thus draw only part of their nitrogen supply from the soil and when returned to the soil add that obtained from the atmospheric sources to the soil supply.

For the grain farmer catch crops are of greatest value and if they are used whenever possible the less often will it be necessary to plow under the regular crop. It should be remembered that a crop of clover cut and sold off the land will do little or nothing to add to the nitrogen in the soil, although it may benefit it in other ways. Leguminous catch crops sown to pasture or to be plowed under are the cheapest method of fertilizing that the farmer can employ. Seed is much cheaper than commercial nitrogen.

Besides adding nitrogen to the soil, that already there should be protected. Bare fields either in winter or summer should not be tolerated. In the summer the hot sun will burn out the organic matter and the rains leach out the plant food. In the winter the rains will wash away the soil and leach out the nitrogen. Sowing a dollar's worth of rye in the fall on land that would otherwise be unprotected through the winter may save ten dollars' worth of fertility per acre. Crops that protect the land are called cover crops. Often cover crops are catch crops and may furnish much organic matter to the soil as well as protect the land. If a leguminous catch or cover crop can not be grown, a nonlegume can be. Any kind of a crop will furnish organic matter to the soil which serves all the functions of organic matter as noted above except to add more nitrogen to the soil than was there before they were grown. Only legumes can do that.

Nitrogen is so soluble and so easily lost from the soil that without growing legumes we could not maintain the soil supply even if everything grown on the farm were fed to live stock and returned in the manure, without waste. This is, of course, not possible, neither is it usually desirable or practical to feed everything produced. The most successful farmers are those who sell the products which bring a good price and keep sufficient stock to consume unsalable and cheap products, catch crops, etc.

Besides furnishing nitrogen, organic matter in the soil performs other functions. It keeps the soil in good physical condition. A soil well supplied with organic matter is loose and porous, permitting the roots of plants to spread freely and so secure the maximum of plant food and moisture. Such a soil also allows water falling on it to pentrate instead of running off, as is the case in hard packed soil. The organic matter being light and porous acts like a sponge to hold the water and so provides a supply in periods of dry weather. Another important function of organic matter in the soil is its influence on the availability of the mineral elements of plant food. Organic matter in soils provides suitable conditions for the abundant growth of fungi, molds, bacteria, etc., and the activity of these organisms undoubtedly affects favorably the solubility of mineral plant food. As the organic matter decays, carbonic acid gas is given off which, dissolved in water, is a powerful solvent rendering more plant food available. Organic acids are formed which also dissolve plant food. In many cases soils apparently deficient in phosphorous or potassium are only deficient in available forms of these substances and the addition of organic matter produces available forms, making further additions of commercial plant food unnecessary.

No matter what the system of farming, whether it be stock farming, grain farming or stock and grain farming, it very essential that a system of rotation be planned that will allow for all of the land being occupied by a leguminous crop at least once in four years. In addition to this, every opportunity should be taken advantage of to grow catch crops in the intervals between regular crops. The leguminous crops should be fed in case of stock farming, and the catch crops either pastured or harvested and fed. All manure should be carefully saved, and a certain part of the farm covered each year so that in time the whole farm may be manured. Light applications of manure over large areas rather than heavy applications over small areas should be the rule. This can only be accomplished with the manure spreader.

While it seems to the writer that every farm should have enough live stock to consume clover hay and other leguminous feeds together with the low grade products, there are many farms where no stock is kept but the work animals. On such farms green manuring and the utilization of all waste material to spread on the land is necessary. Everything must be returned and nothing burned no matter how difficult it may be to plow under. In addition to this, the grain farmer will soon find his land lacking in nitrogen unless a leguminous crop of some kind is plowed under. It seems a hard thing to have to plow under a crop of clover, cowpeas, etc., but without stock to consume the crops it will often be necessary to do it. To prevent the hard feeling enough stock should be kept to consume this material.

PREVENTING SOURING OF MILK IN SUMMER.

(T. R. Bryant, Superintendent Extension Department.)

The souring of milk and the development of bad flavors causes much annoyance and loss to farmers and dairymen in warm weather. This difficulty can be avoided largely.

Good sweet milk depends upon cleanliness and prompt cooling after the milk has been drawn. If the milking is done in a barn, every precaution should be taken to have clean surroundings and no dust. Wherever the milking can be done the cows' udders should be thoroughly wiped with a damp cloth to prevent dirt, dandruff and hair from falling into the pail as all these substances hasten the souring of milk. A hooded pail gives great assistance in keeping out the dirt. The milk should be cooled immediately by running over a milk cooler or being immersed, in a tall narrow pail, in cold water.

All utensils should be carefully washed in tepid water to remove all traces of slime from the seams and corners as this slime harbors bacteria that cause souring. Utensils should then be scalded or steamed and left inverted without wiping.

The observance of these rules will do much to [illegible] the morning quality of milk, [illegible] her great strength to her lifeless [illegible] and outdoor life [illegible].

NOTES from MEADOWBROOK FARM

By William Pitt

Look after the fences.

• • •

Feed the pigs in troughs.

Don't use musty flower pots.

• • •

Push all pigs that are being fattened.

• • •

Do not give up the plan for putting up a silo.

• • •

There is nothing better for the growing pigs than oats.

• • •

The colt that is never handled is always harder to break.

Flax chaff, saved, will save the ice packed for next summer.

• • •

If the plow lugs heavily examine it carefully for slightly sprung beams.

• • •

A little carelessness may result in the loss of a part or a whole litter of pigs.

• • •

A good seed bed is always necessary if we would get a good stand of alfalfa.

• • •

The ripening of cream is properly done only by careful and painstaking attention.

• • •

Wool of good quality, quantity and texture grows only on the backs of thrifty sheep.

• • •

The fall chick, like the fall pig, is hardly ever profitable when it comes late in the season.

• • •

Ewes intended for breeders should be carefully looked after when the cool weather starts in.

• • •

Don't keep unsightly or crippled chickens, even though they have been valuable birds in their day.

• • •

A dirty milker is worse than a dirty cook. To wet the hands with the milk when milking is a dirty habit.

• • •

A good poultryman is industrious, not easily discouraged, filled with pluck and grit, and full of ambition.

• • •

Birds being fattened at this time of year need cool, shady quarters, but as little room as possible for exercising.

• • •

To take a ram just because he can be gotten cheaply and regardless of his qualifications is very poor economy.

The house wren is a very beneficial bird to have about the orchards, as it eats immense quantities of insects.

• • •

Money invested in tile increases the producing power and the real value of the low farm as no other investment can.

• • •

It is not only hard to sell a lean chicken in market, but it also is poor eating. A little care and feed will make them more inviting.

• • •

Nowadays a farmer may sell a pair of mules for enough to buy an automobile, but nine times out of ten he would do better to keep the mules.

• • •

Divide the fencing on the farm so as to change the hog lots, rotating them in crops and making use of the manure else you do not reap the full profits.

• • •

Bowel troubles in calves are sometimes caused by milk that is excessively rich. Milk that is moderate or low in butter fat is usually better for young calves.

• • •

It requires feed to make a lamb of any kind, but a sheep or lamb will come the nearest to making something out of nothing of any kind of a domestic animal.

• • •

So long as wool does not grow on trees nor lamb chops on bushes, there will be a need for sheep, and a flock of sheep can be made to yield a fair profit by the right kind of management.

• • •

With hogs, especially, the feeding that produces a steady, speedy growth, is the most profitable. A pig that is stunted in the early days of its life should never have a place in the breeding herd.

• • •

To a very considerable extent the true value of farming land should be measured by the interest which it earns on a given amount without reducing its fertility and after all expenses are taken from its gross annual product.

• • •

When the hogs come up to the trough to eat, look them over for graybacks. If you find them, thin some kerosene with water and rub it along their backs. An old cloth or a little brush broom with the liquid on it will do the work all right.

Halter break the colts.

Handle potatoes carefully.

• • •

Do not set hens in the fall.

Good cows have their off years.

• • •

Water the horse before feeding.

• • •

Alfalfa does not make as good silage as corn.

• • •

Good fences have a great deal of trouble.

• • •

Keep your horse's mane and tail well cleaned.

• • •

A cow that is underfed is never the most profitable.

• • •

Cool the team by driving it slowly the last mile or two.

• • •

The best time to save seed potatoes is as you dig them.

• • •

Skim milk, clover and shelled corn form an ideal ration for pigs.

• • •

Why not take a colt or a few of the best calves to the county fair?

• • •

If you are working for lots of mutton, use a good, large, meaty ram.

• • •

Every farmer should be horticulturist enough to furnish fruit for his family.

The requisites for a good blackberry are hardiness and productiveness.

• • •

If you want a sleek horse give him some oil meal once in a while in his feed.

• • •

Ventilating the stables is one of the best ways of repelling unhealthy conditions.

• • •

An inferior ewe should never be sold to an uninformed person as a breeder.

• • •

Some egg farmers candle all eggs each day as they are received from the nests.

• • •

Old raspberry canes should be cut and destroyed as soon as the fruit has been gathered.

• • •

Don't let the flowers go to seed. The plants bloom better if the flowers are cut each day.

• • •

No wide awake gardener can afford to neglect the state fair exhibits displays of vegetables.

• • •

Next to a good hired man, one of the handiest things to have about the place is a sack of cement.

• • •

Overfeeding of green cut bone is apt to cause leg troubles, diarrhoea, bowel complaints and worms.

• • •

A hog may be considered half made when past the weaning period without being stunted in its growth.

• • •

Look for vigor in the ram you propose to use. If he has not got it, turn him off and get one that has.

• • •

It is usually mere guesswork to tell the age of a hen by her appearance after she has passed the pullet stage.

• • •

A hen over two years old is fit only for the pot and to mother chickens. She is past her profitable laying days.

• • •

Have your fowls so tame that you can go among them without causing fright. You will get better egg production.

• • •

The pure-bred sire and a dam of the same type of as good blood as it is possible to get will usually bring a desirable colt.

• • •

If you live where stones are plenty and they are found in most sections, never wade through winter mud in going between house and barn.

• • •

The very best horses will never bring their worth on any market unless in good flesh. It is a ruinous policy to send a thin horse to market.

• • •

Never depend on luck. Know your business. Keep strict account and records and study them. Have application, patience, perseverance and be a hustler.

• • •

Green bone is a complete food. It contains the nitrogen for the albumen, the phosphate for the bones of the chicks and carbonaceous matter for the yolks.
